Euchre and Social Evening

The Catholic Women's League intend holding a Progressive Euchre and Social Evening in the Music Hall on Monday evening, Jany. 16th.

Ex-Premier Faces Progressive again

The Progressives of Grenville riding, in convention at Spencerville, decided to oppose Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, who is seeking election in that constituency following the resignation of A. C. Casselman. They selected Arthur K. Pattison of Kemptville, as their candidate. The Liberals of the riding have decided not to oppose Mr. Meighen.

A Correction

We regret that in last week's Record a very regrettable error was made in the obituary of the late Mrs. Stitt of Spencerville, where it said she was the mother of the late Mrs. P. W. Munro. It should have read "and dear mother of Mrs. S. W. Munro." Mrs. Munro is living with her daughter in Detroit, and will be remembered in Chesterville where she was prominent in church work.

Why Not More Skaters

Although the ice at the skating rink has been particularly good for pleasure skating there has been very little indulged in, and were it not for the enthusiasm over hockey it is very unlikely the rink would be kept open. Every accomodation is provided for those wishing to enjoy the great outdoor, invigorating exercise of skating. Every evening after eight o'clock except when a hockey match is on, the ice is open for pleasure skating and under the supervision of the caretaker.

Council by Acclamation

As a result of the second nominations required to secure a full council board for the village, Messrs. Larry Jordan, Isaac Pelletier and A. H. Forbes were given the three vacant seats without a contest, the other three names put in nomination having been with drawn. Those nominated were:—

F. M. McCloskey by Dr. M. Brown and T. J. McGee.

C. W. Casselman by T. J. Mc Gee and Dr. M. Brown

L. Jordan by J. C. Simser and W. Hamilton.

I. Pelletier by D. H. Jackson and H. G. McCambridge.

Thos. Houlehan by I. Pelletier and T. Labre.

A. H. Forbes by T. Houlehan and T. J. McGee.

At the regular nomination Mr. F. Hummel as a councillor and the reeve secured their seats by acclamation.

Hockey League Standing

Considerable interest is being taken in the games played in the Central Ottawa Valley League, which with the first twelve games of the forty game schedule finds Chesterville well out in front with four straight wins. The locals have played good consistent hockey winning at home and away from home by good safe margins, scoring as many as five goals against their opponents in a single game, while the best that has been notched against them in any game is two.

The schedule of forty games is rather a long one and before it is finished there will no doubt be many up and downs with the teams that are wisely handled and kept in the best physical condition putting up the fight until the last game.

The standing of the clubs is as follows:—

Club	Won	Lost
Chesterville	4	0
Berwick	2	3
Morewood	2	3
Finch	2	3
Winchester	2	3

Jan. 5th. Winchester 3, Finch 1

Whittaker—Eamon

A wedding of interest in Wales and Chesterville, took place in Cornwall at the residence of Rev. James Faulds on Thursday Dec. 29 th, at ten o'clock, when Miss Ethel Eamon, eldest daughter of Wm. Eamon of Wales, became the bride of John K. Whittaker, second oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Whittaker of Chesterville. The happy couple were assisted by Mrs. T. Ezard, sister ot the bride, and Chas. Crump, brother-in-law. After the ceremony the party motored to Wales where dinner was served and a happy evening spent by a number of the young couple's friends, at the home of the bride's parents.

Miss Eamon was identified with the Presbyterian Church at Wales, having played the church organ for fourteen years. The young couple motored to Chesterville on Friday where they will reside. The bride was the recipient of many pretty and useful presents which spoke volumes for her popularity. On Jan. 11th there was given a reception in honor of the young couple in which games and music were indulged in till the wee small hours of the morn.

William Collins, Grantley

There passed away, suddenly, at his home in Grantley on January 1st, an aged and respected resident in the person of William Collins, in his 80th year. He was one of the oldest landmarks of the early days of pioneer life, always being blessed with good health until his recent sad accident of being hurt by a horse, which injury proved fatal three days later. From early life he lived on the farm surrounded by scenes of his first and last labor, being a successful farmer and held in high regard having the respect of all who knew him. He leaves to mourn his death his wife and two daughters, Mrs. G. Johnston, Alberta and Mrs. E. Allison near Chesterville, also two sisters, Mrs. J. Shaver, Cornwall and Mrs. G. Merkley, Chesterville; one brother, Mr. R. N. Collins, Norwood, N. Y. Funeral service was conducted in the Grantley Methodist Church at 1.30 p. m. by Rev. Mr. Leach. The remains was placed in the Grantley Vault.

Storm Causes Postponement of Game

The weather man seems not to favor Wednesday nights for the holding of hockey matches on the Chesterville rink. On account of the heavy storm which set in yesterday afternoon and lasted far into the night the game with Winchester had to be postpoued. The storm was the most severe of the winter so far, a great quantity of snow falling accompanied for some time by a heavy wind.

A Canadian Record Hen

(Experimental Farms Note)

"Lady Dot" a White Wyandotte pullet leg band No. D. 3. at the Dominion Experimental Station, Invermere, B. C., completed her yearly record on October 31st, producing 325 eggs during the preceding 365 days. She was hatched on March 25th, 1920 and commenced to lay in October. She was placed in a permanent laying house and trap-nested from November 1st.

During the four winter months "Lady Dot" produced 108 eggs, which is more than many pullets do in a year. From Aug. 1st to Oct. 17th when she quit laying she laid 78 eggs in 78 days. Commencing on May 18th, and continuing until October 17th a period of 153 days, she produced 150 eggs. "Lady Dot?" did not go broody during the year, but commenced to moult on October 11th, and quit laying on the 17th. Unfortunately there is no trap nest record of her eggs prior to November 1st, 1920, otherwise her yearly record would have been more. As an individual she is, if anything, small for the breed, but is the most active bird in the flock.

"Lady Dot" is from an Experimental Farm flock that averaged 197.5 in their pullet year and is the result of 6 years' breeding and selection.

He Had an Eagle Eye

Lanark Era—John Closs of Lammermoor has surpassed them all in the hunting of wild game. On Saturday morning he saw something in the air that appeared to him to be something out of the ordinary, for size, to be flying about this part of the country. He immediately got his gun and took a chance to capture the foreign bird. To his surprise he had shot an eagle with a bald head, known as the baldheaded eagle. The large bird measured six feet, six inches across the wings.

This is What Pays

Havelock Standard—Fifteen hundred barrels and five hundred bushel boxes of apples were picked from the famous orchard on the Cobourg road, owned by James Phillips, this fall. This orchard includes thirty acres, fifteen of which are bearing with about six different varieties. The apples were purchased by D. Coyle of Colborne, and the price paid was six thousand dollars. For the two years previous Mr. Phillips received $6,800 and $8,300 for the orchard.

Profitable Branch of Farming

Perth Expositor—That the townships around Perth are excellently adapted for poultry raising was made clearly evident on Poultry Fair days when a grand total of approximately 64,500 pounds of poultry was bought by the buyers in town. This represents a turnover of some $24,600 distributed among the farmers all over this part of the county. North Lanark also turned in a good supply of poultry to the Almonte Poultry Fair, At that fair some $35,000 worth of poultry was bought, making it the second largest of its kind in Eastern Ontario this year. Napanee had the honor of holding the largest.

Caterpillars Gassed

Just as in war the areoplane sowed death and destruction upon the earth below, so in peace it may be used to spread the poison of death upon areas devasted by diseases or insects inimical to man. A striking instance of this use of the flying machine was given Thursday at Toronto, before the Economic Entomology Section of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. A six-acre catalpa grove at Troy, Ohio, the audience was told, which contained 4,815 trees, ranging in height from 20 to 30 feet, was being destroyed by the catalpa sphinx, which was stripping the grove of its foliage. The areoplane carrying the poison was only 54 seconds in spreading the means of death, doing it so effectively that 99 per cent. of the caterpillars were destroyed. The trials seemed to demonstrate the practicability of the flying machine for the application of insecticides to forests.

Andrew Carnegie was once asked which he considered to be the most important factor in industry—Labor, Capital or brains. The Canny Scot replied, with a merry twinkle in his eye: "Which is the most important leg of a three-legged stool?"

70% Scholars Have Bad Teeth

That 70 per cent. of 70,000 Ontario school children examined were found to have defective teeth and 12 per cent to have defective eye-sight was the statement of Dr. J. Phair, of the Ontario Department of Education, to the education section of the American Association for the Advancement of Science last week.

Dr. Phair stated that the medical surveys of school children now being carried on by the Department of Education throughout the province are the direct result of the movement to establish school medical inspection in the rural sections, inaugurated some eight years ago by the Women's Institute of Ontario. While only some 70,000 children have been examined to date, the figures obtained proved fairly conclusively the need of an appreciation by all of the conditions as they exist throughout the province, if much is to be expected of the movement for health betterment. Of those examined, over 1,700 also showed evidence of deafness.

Fitting Spectacles

Not long ago persons who were beginning to have difficulty in reading would go into a shop, pick out a pair of spectacles through which print appeared to them more distinct and buy them. If they got the spectacles that their eyes really needed, they were lucky. Even now people go into an optician's and ask merely for a pair of glasses. The optician can test the sight only by holding lenses of different strength in front of his customer's eyes—a process not much better than his choosing his spectacles himself.

Finally the oculists, who used to concern themselves chiefly with treating eye diseases such as cataract and glaucoma, began to realize that eyestrain caused many of the diseases they treated. So the oculists made a study of optics and of the defects in the human eye and worked out the problem of rectifying them with glasses.

In fitting glasses there is often much more to do than merely to find out what lens enables the person to see most clearly. The oculist must examine every part of the eye—the retina, the crystalline lens, the muscles that move the eye-ball and those that dilate or contract the pupil, the fluids inside the eye-ball, which prevent the shock to the delicate structures within, and the surface of the transparent part of the eyeball in front, inequalities in which cause astigmatism. He makes the examinations with the aid of various ingenious instrumenis, the use of which requires experience and skill—so much indeed that there has now arisen a new profession concerned entirely with detecting defects in the eye and correcting them with glasses. The practitioners, who are called optometrists, are licensed after examination by the state, and in many of the states none except optometrists and physicians are permitted to prescribe glasses.

Medical men contend that there are certain defects of the eye that cannot be surely corrected unless the eye is examined through a pupil dilated with atropine, but they admit that the new instruments are so ingenious that the cases in which the atropine is necessary are much less numerous than they used to be.

The Waiters Hint

A certain Barber County man was in Topeka several years ago and when dinner was served at one of the hotels roasting ears were on the menu. He is extremely fond of corn in this style and he ordered some. The corn was fine. He gave the coloured waiter an order for some more This was very quickly disposed of and the waiter "repeated".

This happened five times before the hungry man was satisfied. As he completed his dinner with a glass of water, he was at peace with all the world, and turning to the waiter, he remarked:—"What do you think of that kind of a dinner?" The waiter grinned and remarked: "Well, suh, boss, this yeah is the highest priced hotel in Kansas—don't you think you'll save money by boardin' at a livery bahn?"

The mistress who usually taught the children natural history was indisposed. Her place was taken by a young woman who knew little of her subject. She assembled her charges and took them for a country walk.

Presently she said to a girl walking near her. "Now, Joan, you see that beautiful beech tree? I wonder what it would say about itself if it could speak to me?"

"I expect," answered Joan, "it would say, 'If you please, Miss Robinson, and begging your pardon for the liberty, I'm an elm tree'."

Still There

The chauffeur never spoke except when addressed, but his few utterances, given in a brdad brogue, were full of wit.

One of the men in the party remarked: "You're a bright sort of fellow, and it's easy to see that your people came from Ireland."

"No, sorr; ye are very badly mistaken," replied Pat.

"What!" said the man. Didn't they come from Ireland?"

"No, sorr," answered Pat, "they're there yet."

Chesterville Wins From Champions By Score of 4 to 2.

Saturday night on the local rink approximately six hundred people say the "Cyclones" come through winners for the second time in games played on consecutive nights. Friday night at Morewood after one of the hardest and roughest games of the season, they emerged with the long end of a 5 to 0 score. The game was rough through the incompetency of the referee who lost control of the players complet-ly, almost at the beginning of the game. As to the roughness it was not as one-sided as the score the responsibility being about fifty-fifty. The knocks and bruises sustained by the Cyclones did not leave them in any too good shape to face Berwick in the postponed game on Saturday night but with careful attention by Manager Dixon he turned them loose in condition to come through with a win from Berwick by a doubled score, 4 to 2.

Saturday night's game was the fastest and best exhibition of hockey ever staged on the local rink. Berwick's old standbys, who were good enough to land two championships were all on deck and going fast, while Chesterville's new team has speed and hockey ability that marks them as the team to beat to win the championship.

The first twenty minutes were used up without a score, each team requiring that time to get fairly limbered up and all set for what was expected to follow, although Berwick fans nearly had heart failure when their goal umpire shot up his hand giving Chesterville a counter after about fifteen minutes of play. It was a false alarm, the puck had not entered the net as was very plainly seen and the goal was not allowed.

Right off the real in the second period it was evident that the play was going to have more class to it, as both sides gingered up and gave fine exhibitions of combination and individual rushes, Conley going through the Berwick defense and bulging the net for the first count. Bus Hummel after a minute of play added the second, much to the joy of the home crowd. Berwick responded with added effort, the checking of which cost Bogart and Hummel a two minute penalty each, occupying the box at the same time, which gave the visitor's a two-man advantage, Andy Oudekirk doing the trick for his team before the period was six minutes old, in which position the period ended.

With the going at top notch and the eagle eye of Referee Dennenay required at all stages, off-sides were frequent as were penalties for minor infractions. With the play gravitating from end to end in brilliant flashes Johnny Sorrell beat Inman for the third score after seven minutes play, with Hummel following close with his second after the play had been going three minutes, giving his team a three goal lead, which in the next half minute was reduced by one when Gordon Oudekirk slammed one into the home net before you could bat an eye, being the last score of the game.

The game was clean and fast, played in the best spirit of sportsmanship by all the players, while the handling of the game was in Dennenay's always capable manner.

Police Theory is Bogus Bills Caused Murder

The police of Montreal believe that they are approaching a solution of the sensational murder there on Saturday morning of the young Ottawa student, Raoul Delorme, whose dead body, with the head perforated with bullets, was found in the outskirts of the city. It is believed that he attracted attention to himself by flourishing in a restaurant a roll of bogus bills used in his studies. Afterwards he is known to have gone to the theatre. Evidence has been unearthed showing he went there with two men. One of them, it is alleged, phoned for a woman to join them. Later the party went to a roadhouse in Montreal North. While in its neighborhood the young man was shot, and his hat, since discovered on the road, was thrown away so that his head could be covered with napkins to prevent blood running over the sleigh or automobile used. No arrests have been made.

Two Canadian insurance companies will lose practically $25,000 by the young man's death, as Delorme was insured recently for this amount.

Epidemic of Flu in Great Britain Grows Serious

The widespread influenza epidemic now prevalent in several parts of the United Kingdom has become a normal annual event in the past few years.

Up to to-day, although numerous cases have been reported, they have generally been mild, with a very small proportion of deaths. An offical statement issued a week ago showed the visitation to be not more serious than that of last year, but a sudden increase of the number of cases in the last few days has caused the authorities to modify this view.

The Registrar General's weekly report it is understood, shows the outbreak to have reached the stage which is officially recognized as an epidemic. A large number of the cases are of so mild a type that the sufferers treat themselves nevertheless, the number of deaths is substantially increasing. It is impossible to accurately apprise the situation until the Registrar reveals the figures dealing with the deaths, but the epidemic threatens to become more serious unless checked by a change of weather.

A large number of doctors are falling victims to the disease, which has added to the difficulties. The same applies to nurses, of whom 60 are ill at the St. Bartholomew's Hospital alone. A peculiar feature of this year's onslaught is the acute gastic complications in place on the nsual musculiar pains.

The area of the epidemic seems to be confined to London, Yorkshire, Lancashire and the Midlands. The westpart of the country reports comparatively few cases. London is the principal victim. About one hundred new cases appear daily at Woolwich Arsenal, while the ambulance equipment is kept busy throughont the Metropolis conveying sufferers to hospitals. Many of them are picked up in the streets where they collapse.

The White Furrow

"Say, uncle, did you see that little shrimp of a fellow a few rods ahead of us? He had a furrow of snow-white hair that ran straight back from the middle of his forehead to the base of his skull."

"I noticed him," Fred's uncle replied slowly. "But never refer to any one by the slang name of shrimp, my lad, just because he is small. The small man is not responsible for his stature any more than you are for yours, and you do not know the bigness of the heart that his undersized body may enclose.

"You know the Insurance Exchange Building down on Third Avenue? It is twenty stories high and was probably the first of the skyscrapers to be erected about fifteen or twenty years ago. Although it is hardly within that class now in those days people pointed it out as about the highest thing that could possibly be built.

"Up to the nineteenth story the framework was riveted together. Every beam had been hoisted by engine and cable. The riveters were right at the heels of the erectors, and Douglas McLean, the man you just now called a shrimp, was at the very top of that network of fabricated steel. With his forge he heated the rivets white-hot and tossed them down with riflelike precision into the bucket that a boy held where the riveters were working.

"As you just remarked in your slangy way, McLean is a small man, but he is a genuine Scot and has all the characteristics of his race. He was always at least a story above the riviters; and to see him send the red-hot rivets sailing through the air in the dusk to land with a thud in the bucket was a sight to remember. Before the man with the riveting machine had completed his work McLean always had another hot clincher ready to send on its way.

"The boy with the bucket was a man in build; indeed, he was much larger than McLean, and nothing pleased him more than to tease the wiry Scotchman about his size and to suggest that he must feel insignificant among such a large number of big, able-bodied men. McLean, who was a quiet man, said little in reply but if his tormentor had caught the gleam that sometimes shone in his eyes he would have taken warning and stopped his foolishness.

"Once at least the lad's companions had warned him to watch the Scot. 'Some day,' they said, 'they'll pick you up from down there with a shovel, and after a twenty-story drop to a brick pavement a fellow is hardly in shape to tell whether he slipped or fell, or whether somebody stumbled against him and threw him off his balance. Better be careful; or, better still, stop that ragging. It doesn't get you anywhere; besides Scotty never did anything to you; so why torment him all the time? He may surprise you some day, and I really should not blame him if he did touch you up a little bit, for you certainly have it coming.'

"For a while things went on much as usual, and the boy and McLean had no particular trouble. Then one afternoon the Scot missed the bucket three times straight and accused the boy of moving it. He became so angry at the boy that he threatened to spot the next one in his face. The young fellow knew that he could do it too, for McLean was almost as acurate as a rifle with those hot bits of metal.

"For about an hour all went well. Then McLean missed again, and the superintendent came up and in no gentle words warned him to be careful. Men could not work down there with red-hot rivets falling round them. Of course McLean blamed the boy, and the boy denied he was to blame. Then the boss reprimanded the Scotchman again. McLean was furious, and when the superintendent had gone he shook his small fist at the boy and threatened him with almost everything if he missed one more rivet. "I'll throw ye off of here if it is the last thing I ever do! he raged.

"'Humph! Throw me off!' replied the lad, who was every bit as mad as the Scotchman. 'Those pipestem arms couldn't throw a cat on the theatre roof down there!'

"'Ye'll see! Ye'll!' screamed the other, 'And if I do; it will not be after offering any testimony at the inquest.'

"The view from the top of that spiderweb framework was either magnificent or terrifying according to the direction in which you looked. If you gazed off at the surrounding country the view was glorious, but if you looked directly down the side of the building the sight was something to unnerve almost any man.

"As the building was riveted carpenters followed and put in the temporary floors; but although the inside was safe enough, all materials had still to be hoisted from the outside. The work was now well to the top and the men were growing more cautious with each added story of height—all except McLeau. His head was as clear and his foot as confident as if he were on the pavement, and no matter how the wind blew or how hot the sun shone, he would trot nimbly from beam to beam with the sure-footedness of a mountain goat.

"One noon just as the men were preparing to return to work the hoistening engine began its wheezy puffing, and a long girder slowly traveled upward. The boy, who was sitting on the edge of the story next the top, watched the great long beam, fascinated. He had seen the engine hoist hundreds of them just like that one, but somehow that girder seemed different from others and held his attention.

"Up and up it came while the engine puffed laboriously. Then as it came almost opposite him he saw that the clamps were not fitting so tight as they should be and that they had already let the beam slip a little 'If that ever slips out and falls,' he said to himself as he watched the girder trail by, it will be good-night to that bunch down there, and dad in the engine house will be crushed like an egg shell.'

"He could not stop it. No one would pay any attention to any signals except those that the boss erecter made, and he had not yet returned from lunch. The only thing the lad could do was to sit helpless and hope against hope that it would all come out right.

"Just when he thought that all was going to end well and that he had had his worry for his pains the hoisting cable on the sheave above caught in some way, and the girder swung round quickly and struck the building a resounding whack that could be heard for blocks and that brought scores of people to the spot. Unmindful of the danger, they insisted on crowding round the engine house to see what was the trouble.

"As the girder rebounbed the clamps allowed the beam to slip still more until it tipped at an angle of forty-five degrees.

The rebound had thrown it away from the building, and as it came back the lower end swung in and brushed the lad from his seat.

"It all changed so quickly that he could not dodge, and the girder would have whisked him off the building as easily as you would brush a fly from a wall had he not thrown both his arms and his legs round it and held on like grim death. The girder had a short right-angled projection a few feet from the lower end, and as the boy's weight tipped the beam farther and farther from the horizontal he slipped slowly downward until he lodged on the crosspiece.

"When his first fright was gone, he not yet realizing how narrow his escape from death had been, became overconfident and, looking up at Scot, who had rushed to the edge of the building, called out. 'Say, shrimpy, old top, have the boss signal them to let me down, will you? This is not the softest seat in the world. Hurry now—' He stopped short, for the beam had slipped again; in a frenzy he looked up at clamps. Yes, they had slipped more! The top of the beam had no projecting piece. If the clamps continued to slip, both the boy and the beam would shoot off into space and down, down to the street—so far below that the people there looked like pygmies and the automobiles like coaster wagons. To make matters worse, the cable had caught again, and his father was jerking and releasing it in an effort to get it loose and at every jerk the clamps slipped another inch.

"At a glance the Scot had seen the whole trouble and the probable outcome of it. Hastily picking up a few bolts, he kicked off his shoes and ran out to the end of the beam that supported the hoisting tackle. Swinging over the side as confidently as if he had been ten instead of two hundred feet from the pavement, he carefully slid down the steel cable and left a bloody trail where the sharp points of the frayed strands cut into his hands.

"The cable was flowing to and fro in such a way as to make his descent doubly dangerovs, but he never faltered. Near the end of the beam that was close to the cable he stopped to slip a couple of bolts into the holes there.

"Now, now, laddie," he said, 'just keep your nerve. These will prevent the clamp from slipping entirely off, and I am going to slide on down and see if I can't get some in those holes just above the clamp there, so she won't slip a single bit more. If it gets any straighter up and down, you're going to have a job to hold on.'

"The wiry blacksmith slid on down to the clamps and got his bolts placed, but he could not reach the boy, who was beginning to give way to fear and nervousness, and whose strength was fast failing. By stretching as far as he possibly could, McLean could barely touch the boy's extended hands and hoist him to a safer seat alongside were futile.

"It was during one of these periods of straining that the clamps slipped along the girder again until they struck against the Scot's last set of bolts with a whang that made the great cable hum like gigantic violin string. For him to reach the boy was now clearly impossible not only because of the increased distance but because the blacksmith's trouser leg had been caught at the ankle between the clamp and the bolts, and try as he might, he could not tear the tough material loose. He had no knife and could not cut it away.

"Far, far below them the ever increasing crowd was shouting, but what they were saying McLean could not tell; neither did he particularly care, for his eyes and his mind were on the boy a few feet below him. He had forgotten the taunts and the insults the boy had flung in his face, forgotten everything, even his own threats against the life that he was now risking his own to save.

"The boy's face was becoming ashen; his fingers were cramping; the look of death was on face. The Scot knew that if help did not come to the boy in the next minute or so he would drop like a plummet.

"The erecters had gathered at a large window that opened directly opposite the two men and were shouting encouragement first to one, then to the other. Since the beam was only a few feet from the edge, they made a human chain by grasping one another round the waist, with the outside man leaning far out overthe edge. But they could not quite reach the unfortunate boy.

"McLean saw that the men were absolutely powerless and knew that he alone could help the lad. Locking his ankles round the beam above the clamps, he lowered himself slowly until he lay head downward with his back to the girder. Coin, watch and keys slipped from his pockets and went tinkling to the pavement.

"In that position he could just catch the boy by the wrists, but when he tried to hoist him he found that his own strength was now to far spent for a straight lift, and the boy was too weak and faint to help himself. A second later the Scot felt the boy's hold relax; he had become unconscious and had slumped downward off the crosspiece.

"The sudden jerk the boy's weight gave the blacksmith's arms seemed almost to pull them from their sockets; the man bit his lips until the blood started. Though he could not see the pavement, in his mind he knew just how far it was down there, and from the noise he knew that the crowd must be a large one.

"The chords in his arms stood out in great blue knots, and the veins looked as if they were about to burst; but with each paroxysm of pain that came with the slightest additional exertion he gritted his teeth the harder. Then he began to swing the lad to and fro like a pendulum. The men at the window at once understood his plan and again formed their chain.

"Every swing came an inch nearer to the window, and the men waiting there began to wonder just how long the blacksmith's blood-covered hands could keep their hold upon the boy's sweaty wrists. The Scot's eyes were fairly popping from his head and his face was a livid purple. It must end soon.

"One more swing, and the outside man gave a yell that told he had the boy by the ankles. Then those behind him dragged the two back over the edge to safety. The lad had received a scalp wound where his head had struck the crosspiece on the beam, but otherwise he seemed uninjured. Two of the men attended him while the rest gave their attention to McLean, whose position was even more precarious than before, for he was hanging head downward and had grown too weak to raise himself. Moreover when the weight of the boy had been removed from the beam it had swung upward and round, hitting against the taut ground cable, which rubbed against McLean's forehead and peeled off a strip of skin from there to the back of his skull. When the hair grew in it was snow-white, and since he parts it in the middle, it does look like a white furrow as you suggested; but, instead of being an oddity, it is a badge of honor.

"The beam whirling slowly round, unloosened the cable in the pulley, and McLean was lowered and rushed to the hospital."

"I'll bet there was a lot of cheering among you fellows when he reached the ground."

"Well I really cannot say from personal knowledge, for I do not know." He removed his hat and, parting his hair, disclosed an ugly scar. "You see, I was the fellow that Douglas McLean swung to the window."

An Irish priest had labored hard with one of his flock to induce him to give up whiskey. "I tell you, Michael," said the priest, "whiskey is your worst enemy, and you should keep as far away from it as you can." "Me enemy, is it, Father?" responded Michael, "and it was your reverence's self that was tellin' us only in the pulpit last Sunday to love our enemies!" "So I was, Michael," rejoined the priest, "but I didn't tell you to swallow them."

Last Week's Problem

We are pleased to announce that Scout Willie Tate of the Peewit Patrol is the winner of the 1922 Diary Solution to the problem. Bill says it was just a case of finding the Least Common Multiple of 9, 3, and 2. which is 18. By subtracting 1, it is readily seen that 17 is not divisible by any of the three numbers. This necessitates the buying of one more steer. When the division was made the three sons received 2, 6, and 9, head respectively. There was nothing left but for the poor man to take home the extra steer plus $50.

A Treasure Hunt

Here's a chance for someone to try his ability in following directions and map-making. After reading the following story, take pencil and paper, and byusing, say, a scale of one-quarter inch to the space, draw a course to be used in finding the treasure.

"La Fitte was a famous American pirate of the Gulf of Mexico. Like all pirates, he buried his treasure and made a map of its location. One of the maps was found and the directions given on it are as follows:—Start at the rock in Dead Man's Gulch, near the skull of the Spaniard, travel northwest 70 paces to a cache where you will find a cask of rum: from thence travel due west 30 paces where you will find the finger-bones of Don Pedro; thence northwest 30 paces where you will find a cache of coffin nails; thence north 20 paces where you will find a cache of bullets; thence northeast 40 paces where you will find a cache of copper coins; thence west 60 paces where you will find a cache of brass coins; thence southeast where you will find a cache of silver coins; thence southwest 30 paces where where you will find a cache with keys to the treasure-chest; then northwest 30 paces where you will find the treasure, a brass-bound chest containing bars of gold, gold coins, silver, and precious stones."

Victor and Kenneth were late for school and were called to account for it. "What made you late, Victor?" said the teacher.

"Please, sir, I was dreaming I was going to California, and I thought the school-bell was the train just pulling out.

"You did, eh," said the teacher, "and now, sir, (turning to Kenneth), what have you to say for yourself?"

"Please sir, I—I was just waitin' to see Vic. off."

A Test

A certain young man, just home from high school, was being questioned by his fond parent as to the nature of his studies,

Son: "Well, father, I've been learning Arithmetic."

Father: "Well, what about it?"

Son: Also, I've studied French, German, Euclid—

Father: Ah! that's better, now just tell me the Euclid for "Good morning."

Buried Treasure

(Our First Serial)—by S. M.

Common report said that there was buried treasure over on Dooney's Island. The Island was a long, narrow, heavily-wooded strip of land in Lake Clare, about two miles from the town of Bethany.

The ruins of two or three cabries on the island, built before the days of the oldest resident of the town, gave some colour to the story that the island had once been the rendezvous of a band of robbers, and this impression had been strengthened by the finding of a solid gold chain of antique pattern on the island by a member of a fishing party from Bethany.

This find when noised abroad brought a good many treasure-hunters to the island, but nothing else of any value was found. But belief in the existence of the buried treasure did not die. The boys of the town made frequent expeditions to the island and wasted many an honr among the rocks and in the woods searching for the buried treasure.

My best boy friend, Billy Daggs was a firm and enthusiastic believer in the buried treasure. Bill was very imaginative. He was always fancying things out of the ordinary, and his original schemes made him immensely popular with the other boys in town.

Billy had piloted many a party of treasure-seekers to the island. These parties invariably failed to locate the treasure, and their failure only increased Bill's determination to finally succeed for he was a boy who persevered in an undertaking of his own choice. One day he came over to my place with shining eyes and that eager manner which always indicated the evolution of some new scheme.

"Say, Dick," he said, "do you want to go over to Dooney's Island hunting treasure with me next Saturday?"

"Oh, fudge," I said, impatiently, "What's the use of fooling away any more time and half-breaking our backs digging around rocks and tree-roots for only imaginary treasure. This treasure story is only a humbug."

"Now, see here," said Bill impressively, "you listen to me. I was born on Good Friday and I also got a mole on the back of my neck. Now these didn't happen for nothing, did they?" (Bill was a great believer in signs, omens, moles, etc.)

"And more'n that," he continued, "I found a horseshoe yesterday and a black cat came to our house to-day; and I guess if you'd had the dream I had last night, you'd think these all meant something."

"What did you dream?" I asked, for I never believed in dreams myself.

"Well you know where that peculiar-looking rock is over on the east side of the island?"

"Yes, I know."

"And you know those two or three wild plum trees standing by themselves about fifty feet from that boulder?"

"Yes, I remember them, What about it?"

"Well, last night, I dreamed a mighty queer dream."

"What was it?"

"I dreamed that you aud I were over on Dooney's Island—all alone, mind you— and that we were beside that big black rock, when all at once we saw a lovely young lady dressed all in white standing near us. She seemed to motiou for us to follow her. It was just as plain as day, Dick. She just seemed to glide along, without moving her feet, until she came to those three plum-trees and said, "Dig here! Dig here!"

"Billy, did she, really?"

"Oh, yes, honest, she did! I could still hear her words ringing in my ears when I awoke. You can laugh at me all you want to, but I think that dream meant something, and I'm going to dig under those plum trees before I'm a day older!"

He Kicked

One day Mr. Tate bought Bill a donkey to amuse himself with. He got on all right at first but oneday he came in crying—the donkey had kicked him.

"You must surely have been annoying him," said Mr. Tate.

"No, I wasn't" said Bill, "I was only trying to cut my name on him."

20 Point on Hogs and Bacon Markets

Here are 20 points which outline the present position and the main requirements of the markets for Canadian hogs:

1. Select bacon hogs must weigh between 160 and 210 lbs., at the packing plants (170-220 lbs. on the farm).

2. Very little more than one-half of the hogs are now being marketed within the weight-limit to yield exportable "Wiltshire sides."

3. There is only a very limited market for the fat, lard-type of hog in Canada; that limit seems about reached.

4. But there is an almost unlimited market for bacon in Great Britain, provided it is that which the British consumer desires.

5. Great Britain imports normally about 600,000,000 lbs. of bacon every year, roundly 12,000,000 lbs. a week.

6. In 1913, the year before the war, imports from Canada were under 24,000,000 lbs — just two weeks' share of the normal import.

7. A "Wiltshire side" is a trade term for the shape of the cut. It is one-half of the carcass without head and feet.

8. These sides are only given a light pickle in Canada. The smoking and cutting for retail are done by English curers.

9. Domestic taste shows a tendency to prefer lean, streaky bacon very similar to the prevailing taste in Great Britain. This is due probably to our increase of city dwellers.

10. One type of hog will therefore enter to both the domestic and export trades. This must be the bacon-type acclaimed as best at the Ottawa conference.

11. The standard then set requires jowl and shoulder light and smooth, back and neck to tail evenly fleshed, side long, medium depth dropping straight from back, ham full, good general finish, no excess fat.

12. In the United States hog feeding conditions and market demand for meats differ radically from those in Canada and comparisons cannot properly be made.

13. As Canadian packers can find only a limited market for lard-types they cannot indefinitely take them off the hands of the farmers who misguidedly continue to produce such hogs.

14. Canadian hog production on a scale to hold the British export trade cannot be successfully done by driblets, with a glut at one season, nor in the free-and-easy supply of many varying types of carcasses.

15. There must be uniformity in East and West, and both must furnish exactly what the British consumer wants if Canadian farmers are to get the premium which packers agree to pay after May 1st.

16. In the common interest the breeding of fads must be discouraged. Their carcasses do not yield the right conformation for "Wiltshire sides".

17. Conformation or shape is as important as weight. Two sides from differing breeds may apparently have the proper length over all but if the shoulder of one is too thick, the belly too thin, or the back too fat it will reduce the value of the parts from which the high-priced, well-balanced lean-and-fat cuts are taken.

18. Farmer-producers are most likely to get the right bacon types among well selected Yorkshires, Tamworths or the bacon sub-section of the Berkshire breed.

19. Other breeds are unsuitable and the average farmer cannot afford to breed them.

20. The two inter-linked and essential halves of the livestock industry are:—

1. Production and marketing farm animals;
2. Manufacturing and marketing of meat.
