Premier King is unfortunate in the names of his Finance Ministers. First he was Robbing us, now he is Dunning us.

A carload of old horses were shipped from Carp to a Montreal glue factory. They were purchased for from $5 to $10 each.

There is nothing that pays higher dividens in comfort than that of pulling up an extra blanket during a night suddenly turned cold.

It cost Eusebe Dubois $10 and costs in Hull police court yesterday because he snored in church during the service and disturbed a solo singer.

There was a great rush on one of our local banks on Monday—it was the last day to pay your taxes and evidently the time limit was taken advantage of.

Swallows fly at the rate of more than 100 miles an hour and are among the world's fastest birds. And some of the fastest birds we know do a lot of swallowing.

The Cornwall Freeholder, published twice a week, is now devoting a page to Morrisburg happenings, and as a result has a circulation of nearly 300 in that village.

A tug-of-war contest is a demonstration of good team work. When a community pull together and with the idea of winning, that communlty has the proper idea of good team work.

An now the bootlegger has found another way to serve his dupes with alcoholic stimulants It is in the shape of a compound jelly, and the Government authorities are instructed to seize all such under the Intoxicating Act.

One day a Scotchman, out with some of his friends, took his handkerchief from his pocket and a set of false teeth fell to the floor. They said: "We didn't know you used them." "I don't either," he said "They belong to my wife. I caught her eating between meals."

If Premier Ferguson would lable each bottle of booze, sold by the Province, "Poison" or "Sure misery "and probable death to users." he would save a lot of money in printing the Temperance literature he proposed to distribute with each purchase of government liquor.

Mr. Sinclair, Leader of the Liberal Party, blames the lack of newspaper publicity for a large part of the defeat of his party at the polls for the recent election. Mr. Sinclair is right, but he should have added that the Liberal leader gave the newspapers very litt'e to enthuse over. His own wavering, indefinite and, to use Premier Ferguson's just phrase, "wobbling" attitude had more to do with his utter defeat than anything else.

The latest rumour from Ottawa is that Hon. T. A. Crerar, former leader of the Progressives will succeed Hon C. A. Dunning as Minister of Railways and Canals. This means that Premier King is cutting Eastern Canada down one minister in his cabinet and handing the advantage to the west. It is also rumored that Hon. Mr. Forke, a former Progressive Leader, now in the Kings Cabinet, is to be retired to the Senate.

Trenton is to become the permanent home of Canada's air and sea forces. Eighty five men are engaged in preparing for the invasion of 500 fliers from Camp Borden. All the dwellings and buildings in the area are being demolished and telephone and hydro lines will be dismantled and run underground so that there will be obstructions for the planes. Farmers whose property has been purchased by the Dominion Government have been ordered to vacate. This effects ten farmers and over 1000 acres will be leveled off for the Airport.

Although Canada possesses only about one-half of one per cent. of the world's population, says the weekly report of Stoble-Furlong, Matthews, of Minneapolis the Dominion produces about 9 per cent of the world's wheat; over 10 per cent of the world's oats; nearly 10 per cent of the world's gold and silver, 15 per cent of the world's wood pulp and 90 per cent of the world's nickel. Canada has 16 per cent of the world's known coal resources and a large part of its asbestos and nickel. It ranks third as a gold producer, eighth in cheese production and fifth in that of butter. The quality of its wheat is famous.

A Brinston Correspondent writes as follows: Wednesday evening the Melvin Dramatic Club, of Winchester, upheld their reputation as amateur actors and actresses, when they presented their comedy-drama, 'A Prairie Rose," in Gilson's hall in aid of Matilda Public Library. The entire caste certainly did themselves credit, and in the presentation of that splendid play they filled their dramatic scenes with great feeling, and their comedy was a scream throughout. No attempts will be made to select the star performer, as each filled his or her respective character in very pro-professional style.

A Splendid Concert

Gordon Eckardt's Bell Ringers featuring Carman Gay and her Gypsy Band which appeared in Lannin's Hall last Friday night was one of the finest performance of its kind, ever presented in Winchester. It was well patronized and every one seemed satisfied that they had received their money's worth when the program was ended. The company consists of five ladies, each being an accomplished musicians. The playing and Singing was high class in every respect The ringing of the Swiss Bell was also done in a very skillfull manner. The scenery for the different acts was very attractive and the colored spot lights reflected on the stage was artistically arranged. As a rule one never knows what to expect from a road show visiting a small town, but when Gordon Eckardt's name appears featuring Carmon Gay and her Gypsy Band, a real good show can be expected.

Another Fire

On Tuesday morning about 2.30 a. m. the people of Winchester were aroused from their slumber by the sound of the fire gong, when fire, of an unknown origin completely destroyed the stable and garage of Mr. Jas. Slater, Caleb St., also its contents, two buggies, a Studebaker car, a quantity of lumber and some machine parts. We were unable to learn many particulars owing to the fact that Mr. Slater had to leave that same morning for his lumber camp near Sharbot Lake. However in conversing with Mrs. Slater, we were told that all members of the household were fast asleep at the time, and that she just happened to awaken and notice the glare of the fire in the sky. She at once spread the news and Mr. Slater hurried up and rang the fire bell, and soon after a large number of fire-fighters were on hand and had the blaze under control. Had the fire engine not functioned in a perfect manner, it is hard to say what other buildings would have taken fire also. The stable was of wood and tin construction, and was covered by insurance. The car was also insured, but we do not know to what extent. Mrs. Slater states that they haven't the slightest idea as to the cause of the fire. Mr. Slater seems unlucky as only last winter his house was badly damaged by fire.

Synopsis
What Happened Before

At a party in Palm Beach given by Mr. Cooper Clary, Leeson, an attorney, meets Lucy Harkness, known as Devil-May-Care because of her adventurous, eventful life. In a game in which partners for the evening are chosen, Lucy is won by Tim Stevens, who has a great reputation as a successful heart-breaker. Leeson is a bit jealous. Tim Stevens tells Lucy they are going aboard his boat, the Minerva, and she accedes in order not to be "a quitter." Asked if she is sorry that he won her company, Lucy says she is not and that evidently Fate has arranged it. Tim thereupon tells her to stop looking regretfully after Leeson.

Aboard Stevens' boat, the Minerva, Stevens tells Lucy of his love. When she replies with contempt for him, he grows violently angry and she becomes afraid of him. He says he will never let her go from the Minerva until she accepts him. To escape him, she leaps into the water from her cabin window, swimming a short distance under water.

Lucy reaches land and meets Dr. Fergus Faunce on an island. He takes care of her and takes her home. Everyone is worried about her, and when she meets Stevens he is frantic, regretful and still ardent in protestations of love.

Leeson informs Lucy that Stevens must raise a quarter of a million dollars or go to jail—"at five o'clock." Lucy goes to her bank and raises the sum.

Lucy goes to Stevens to help him, but he refuses to take money from a woman to whom he is not married. So Lucy marries this man that she hates, and promptly runs away from him, going to her staunch friend Dr. Fergus Faunce to tell what she has done.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

Tim Stevens left the villa of his wife in a state of mind that bordered on insanity. Bewilderment, outraged pride, denied love—all these conspired to render him something less than sane. But the breezes from the Gulf Stream blew upon him; the exercise of walking, by its very monotony, soothed his nerves, and by the time he reached his own home he was able to think coherently.

She had run away. No doubt of that. Why she had run away, why she had married him only to desert him for all the world like a heroine of a cheap novelette, he could not imagine. Only, it was no cheap and vulgar motive that actuated her. He knew that. Lucy might be bizarre, but never common.

It suddenly occurred to him that she might be mad. Certainly this would seem a reasonable explanation of all that she had done. Only, he remembered the cool gray eyes, the broad forehead, to know that no insanity lurked within that perfectly shaped head.

She was the most impulsive creature on earth. He knew this. And yet, though she might have acted upon impulse, in marrying and leaving him, it would be impulse only because it had been done so suddenly. She had done whatever she had done with deliberation, even though she had not wasted much time in planning.

Nevertheless, his eyes lighted as he stepped inside his patio, only to grow somber instantly as she was not revealed to his eager glance. Hope—or, rather, its pale specter—vanished completely.

He sat down, rang for a servant, ordered a high-ball, and drank it slowly, sipping it carefully, as though he sought by taste to analyze its ingredients. A sudden odd thought came to him: the liquor had no savor, and nothing else in life would have savor again unless it were accompanied, or spiced, by the presence of Lucy.

This was love. This was an ache that distracted, that maddened, that drove one to frenzy. No mere balked desire this, but an overwhelming longing, a frantic longing that, he suddenly realized, was not only of the flesh but of the soul.

He could understand why man, frustrated in love, might sink to any level of dissipation, to win a moment of forgetfulness. An overwhelming urge seized upon him, to drink and drink until he won unconsciousness. Then his mouth hardened, and his eyes, that had not been focussed, but had been wide and staring, resumed their customary coolness. Lucy Harkness had made a public fool of him,—at least, publicity could not be long avoided,—but he would add to the foolishness nothing of his own. He wouldn't drink, and he wouldn't kill himself, and he'd do nothing . . . save find her.

He rang again, and ordered a servant to fetch Modane, the skipper of the Minerva. The swart Levantine arrived shortly.

"I was married to-day, Modane," said Stevens.

Modane nodded.

"I congratulate you, sir."

"And Mrs. Stevens and I sail on the Minerva in half an hour, on our honeymoon, Modane," Stevens continued.

Again the skipper nodded.

"Our destination, sir?"

"You are to proceed south, beyond Miami. Every second day you'll send a man to Miami in a motorboat, and at the post-office he'll inquire for letters for yourself. For, Modane, Mrs. Stevens and I shall not be aboard the Minerva."

"No, sir," said Modane.

"But the crew are not to know this, and no one else is to know it. Once you've started, the crew will discover it, but it will be too late for them to gossip. Send a tight-mouthed man ashore for letters, one that isn't inclined to gossip."

"Yes, sir," said Modane. "You should never have let her get ashore when once you had her aboard the boat, sir."

Stevens grinned faintly.

"Had she been your woman you'd have tamed her, eh? But what made you suspect . . ."

"She's not here, sir," said Modane. "And after jumping overboard . . . Well, a man thinks, sir."

"Modane, you've been in my employ several years. You know me as well as any one."

"And like you better, sir," said Modane, "than any one else."

"Hang on!" she heard him cry, his voice barely audible.

"Much obliged. Then tell me: why would a woman marry me and then run away?"

"You've got a way, sir, of commanding, not asking; a proud woman might resent that, might want you to come to heel, instead of herself."

"I'll think that over," said Stevens. "And when I bring my wife aboard—Modane, where could she have landed yesterday morning?"

Modane drew a pocket map from inside his double-breasted reefer jacket. He unfolded it, squinted at it, then placed a stubby forefinger on a point south of Palm Beach.

"Mango Key, sir, or one of those other keys. I think you the drift was inward, but you thought that the Gulf Stream current set outward where she went overboard. Mango Key or thereabouts, sir."

"Much obliged, Modane. You may go."

"You don't want . . . help, sir?" asked the sailor.

Stevens laughed

"To fetch back my own wife? Not help, not even my own two hands, Modane. If she won't come for words, then . . . she'll never come."

"Don't waste 'em, sir," pleaded Modane. "Take her, grab her, make her come."

Stevens shook his head.

"Would you have an unwilling wife, Modane?"

Modane showed his white teeth.

"If I wanted her, and could get her, it wouldn't matter to me whether she came willing or unwilling, I'd make her willing."

"All women aren't the same, you know," suggested Stevens.

"Sure they are, sir, like all men! They don't know what they want. They wait for some stronger person to tell 'em what they want, and then they jump with joy and claim they wanted it all the time."

"Not all men, nor all women," said Stevens.

"Yes, sir, all men, and all women," insisted Modane.

"But suppose . . . suppose one isn't the stronger?" asked Stevens.

Modane shrugged.

"In that case lie down, let her walk on you. You got to, if she's stronger than you. But is she, sir?"

In his turn Stevens shrugged.

"That remains to be found out, Modane."

CHAPTER IV

The Lucy was christened solemnly; the human Lucy broke a pint bottle of champagne over the craft's bows, and then another pint was opened and the ritual was sealed by Faunce and herself drinking the new Lucy's health and success.

"Though what greater measure of success the Lucy can hope for than to have carried you as a passenger—"

"As a member of the crew," Devil-May-Care interrupted Faunce.

"I accept the amendment, Lucy," said Faunce. "Well, what more this craft can hope for I cannot imagine."

They were bowling leisurely south, across a placid ocean, beneath a shining sun and fleecy clouds. There was the faintest swell, and along the sandy shore, miles inland, breakers curled and broke foamily, and the murmur of their dissolution sounded like a faint chant in the distance.

Sky, atmosphere, and sea had combined to lull the travelers into dreamy security. But in the tropics Nature is more treacherous than in the frozen Arctic. As the good are supposed to die young, their frail bodies overburdened by the weight of their virtues, so the sweetness of the tropics becomes insupportable to Nature, who when sweetness has lost its savor promptly proceeds to show what a real wild lady she can be.

Out at sea Faunce saw a whirling something that twisted and strained in its effort to climb higher, although already it reached, or seemed to reach a dark cloud that had sprung suddenly from nowhere. He had never seen a waterspout before, but he needed no previous acquaintance for instant recognition.

Lucy sat upright as a cold chill descended upon her. Already the sun was obliterated and a false night was upon them. The placid ocean had awakened, was stirring, was tossing as though in agony. The Lucy rose suddenly, rolled sideways, then pitched into a gulf. Water broke over her bows, sluiced the deck, drenched Lucy Stevens, splashed over Faunce at the wheel.

"Hang on!" she heard him cry, his voice barely audible above the roar of the cyclone. And now not merely the salt water drenched her, but the wildest rain she had ever known came down from the darkened skies; huge hailstones hit the deck, bounded about, she oddly thought, like tennis-balls, or rounded dice. . . . Was this some gambling demon up aloft who shook dice for the lives of Faunce and herself?

The Lucy seemed to rise clear of the water; propelled by wind and wave it shot along like a hydroplane. Lightning gleamed and thunder roared. Beaten flat to the deck by the force of the wind, and hanging on with grim determination to the rail, she saw Flaunce straining at the wheel, trying to deflect the course of the craft.

But why try to steer in this hurricane? She turned her head and knew the answer to her unuttered question. Ahead of them, a rod away, loomed the terrifying bulk of the great waterspout which first had told Faunce of their peril.

And as the Lucy smashed into the watery tower, her lips twisted in an ironic smile. It was for this that she had swum agonizingly to shore only thirty-six hours ago.

How much of life is real, and how much of it is a dream? Or is it all a dream? Lucy, lying in a berth, asked herself these questions. This was the room aboard the Minerva from which, some time ago, she distinctly remembered having dived into the Gulf Stream. Yet she was in this cabin, dry, not soaked from long immersion, clothed in pajamas which she recognized as having seen in this room just after she had shut the door upon Tim Stevens.

And why, unless she had been drugged, had she dreamed such terrible dreams? And yet they hadn't all been terrible. Fergus Faunce had appeared in them, dear Fergus Faunce with his kindly, whimsical mouth, his gentle eyes behind the green sunglasses, his graying hair, his twisted nose.

Ah, Fergus at least was real! No dream could have evoked so quaint and lovable a character. And if Fergus was real, then all of the mad things that she remembered—her swim ashore, Mango Key, her marriage, her flight . . .

She sat up, while something cold seemed to lay a clammy hand or claw upon her breast. The hurricane, the waterspout, the final crash! She had been saved; but what about Fergus? She seemed to remember that his hand had clutched at her, as though to drag her from beneath the flood, and after that she remembered nothing.

English Motorists Turn to Closed Cars

The British With 40 Million People Have as Many Cars as Canada With Her 9 Million

MOTOR SHOW NOTES

"In Great Britain in 1923 there were 384,000 private cars registered, in 1927 the total rose to 778,000, and in 1928 the figure reached 900,557.

"The total number of motor-vehicles at the beginning of this year was 1,332,771. The total consumption of motor spirit for the first six months of this year was 433,527,847 gallons.

"The total output of cars and commercial vehicles for last year was 211,877, which was made up of 165,352 cars and 46,525 commercial vehicles.

"The car and chassis exports for 1928 and the first six months of 1929 totalled respectively 26,306 and 15,982, while the equivalent figures for commercial vehicles were 6,471 and 4,930.

"Taking all registered motor vehicles, including motorcycles, there are fewer than nine vehicles to the mile of road."—The Times.

The amazing facts and figures given above provide the reason for the fact that London's big Motor Show interests the ordinary man more than any other London show during the year, for the men and women of the small towns are personally and often financially interested. And they were catered for, too, because as one writer puts it, "The total walking distance round the stalls must be three or four miles, and such are the distractions and the obstructions that it is hard going all the way."

"An affair for rich men and specialists only a few years ago," says the Star, "the Motor Show has become one of our demonocratic institutions. The aristocrats of the motor-car world still reign in all the dignity of superb achievement and high prices. But the commoners among cars to-day have most of the qualities regarded only recently as luxuries.

A Magic Carpet

"Technical experts may discuss the defects of various makes, but the fact is that the modern motor-car is a splendid piece of work. It offers to the modern man—and to the modern woman—a magic carpet. Once such things existed only in the dreams of romancers. Now they are available on the instalment system for almost everybody."

"Of all the inventions and discoveries of the last hundred years," is the point made by the Sunday Times, "none has affected so deeply and widely the lives and habits of a whole civilization.

"When the first mixture of petrol vapour exploded in the cylinder of the first motor-car engine it set in motion the wheels of a social revolution. No tumbril rolling to the guillotine was more surely the herald of a new order. Small wonder the earliest cars on the roads were preceded by a red flag!" But the Sunday Times adds:—

"In 1929 the pedestrian can hardly call his soles his own. His freedom of movement grows increasingly restricted until the very act of crossing the street has become an adventure. The list of casualties mounts and mounts.

"These are the problems that have arisen in a quarter of a century through the advent of the motor-car It is for the human brain which evolved this undeniable and headstrong boon to mankind, to evolve also ways and means to control its less beneficent consequences."

"Petrol moves us all to and from our work or leasure," says the Daily Herald. "And the development of the small car has brought the possession of a motor within reach of thousands upon thousands who could never, in the old days, have dreamed of being 'carriage' folk."

"Out Upon Them"

"Not the least of the changes which the coming of the motor has brought with it has been the opening up of the countryside. Every fine week-end in cars, on cycles, in buses, in charabancs, great armies of all classes stream out from the big cities to the fields or the sea.

"There are those who complain that the peace of the countryside has been destroyed by the invasion. They resent the coming of the 'tripper' to beauty spots once beyond his reach. 'Out upon them! The change is, on the balance, pure gain. For every grumbler there are a thousand others to whom the motor has given new pleasure and new values in their lives.'"

"It seems that in the main the efforts of manufacturers this year," says the Daily Chronicle, "have been directed not so much to producing cheaper cars as better ones for the same money. There is a point at which mere cheapness would become shoddiness; and the motoring public is becoming more fastidious.

"The increasing tendency this year to substitute six-cylinder engines for four-cylinder in all but the cheapest makes illustrates this desire to possess smoother and more powerful machines, even if the running costs are greater. No doubt it also shows the intention of British manufacturers to concentrate on a type of car which will be more acceptable abroad.

"There are many indications that manufacturers are realizing that the home market will one day each saturation point, and that they must seek further expansion in foreign markets. Apart from Britain, and apart from Europe, there are vast markets in the Dominions, in which the excellence of our manufacture ensures success as soon as their special requirements are studied."

The Trimuph of Color

"This is the gayest motor show one remembers to have seen," says the Manchester Guardian.

"The brighter motoring movement is illustrated by many examples of cheerful color—blues, greens, reds, and yellow, and all combinations of these. In former years the few brilliant cars have been regarded with rather indulgent amusement, as due to the artistic ambitions of the foreigner, chiefly the Italian.

"This Show is the triumph of color, though there was a feeling that a car the sides of which were painted in different colors was going a little too far. The color schemes struck one as on the whole in excellent taste, avoiding the extremes of the freakish and the dull.

"One point that interests everyone is that there are many small inventions and improvements in the way of safety devices which should help to safeguard the public against the incompetent driver and the incompetent driver against himself. One noted hydraulic shock absorbers, safety brakes, and non-splinterable glass.

"The vast majority of the cars, even the cheapest, are of the saloon or closed type. It would seem that the open car is becoming obsolete, like the open buses in London. What has become of the fresh-air-loving motorist?"

Introspection

I often wonder if, when you are dead,
I shall look back on these unhappy days,
And ask myself in sudden, shamed amaze
How many things I might have left unsaid—
This bitter sentence, that intended slight!
How often, when Hate burned,
I might have wisely turned
And cooled it patiently out in the night!
Will I an old intolerance bemoan
When you are dead, and I am left alone?

I vow repentance, then you speak again;
And ah! so cunningly you edge each dart!
So well you know each vulnerable part
That all to great becomes the rage and pain.
So I, too, lift my bow,
Skilled archery to show,
And the whole sordid war begins again!
But still a desperate hope persists that we
Some kindness will bequeath to Memory!

LEISURE

The right use of leisure is no doubt a harder problem than the right use of our working hours. The soul is dyed the color of its leisure thoughts. As a man thinketh in his heart so is he. Those who show by the use of their leisure that their one object is never to be alone with themselves confess thereby that their lives are a failure.

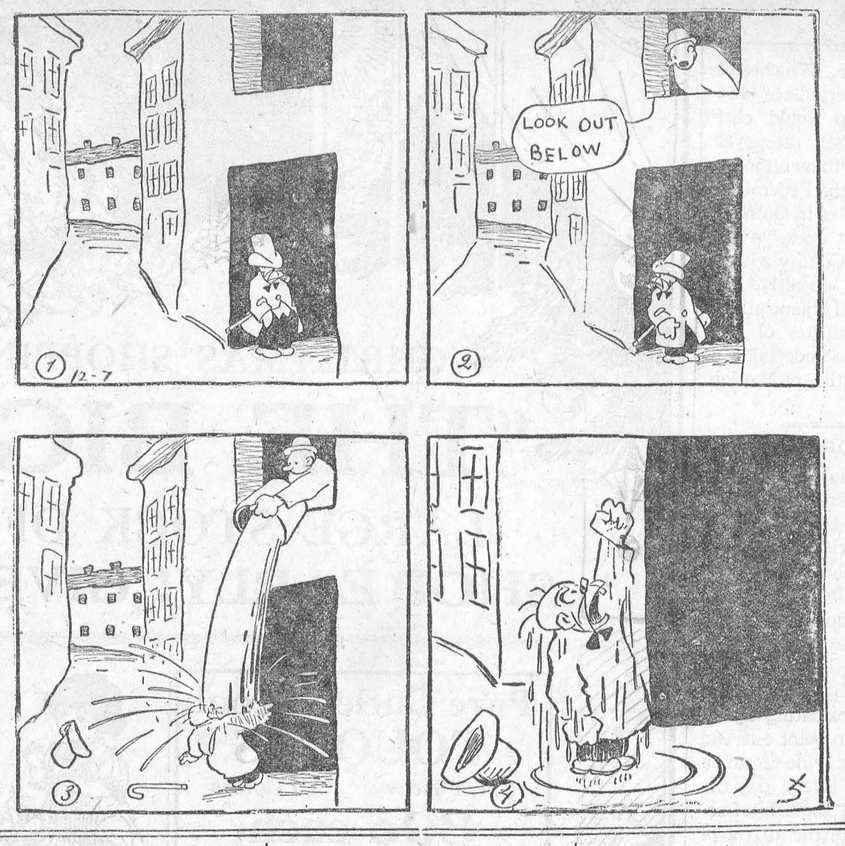
ADAMSON'S ADVENTURES—By O. Jacobsson



London Has Moved Back to the Ocean

Transatlantic Passengers in Biggest Ships Can Land at Tilbury Docks

London.—London has moved itself back to the ocean, where it used to be in the days of Drake. By spring, when the next rush of transatlantic tourists begins, travelers will find that they can sail up to London's very doorstep in the biggest and fastest ships.

Instead of disembarking at Southampton or Liverpool and going 78 to 200 miles by train, they will be able to land at Tilbury docks, a half hours' ride from the big London hotels. The new Tilbury entrance lock, capable of handling any passenger ship afloat, was opened recently. By spring the new landing stage and railway station are scheduled to be ready.

World competition in the building of bigger and faster liners began to have its effect on London more than a quarter of a century ago. The growing number of passengers ships "too big" for the port of London began, in effect, to push London farther from the sea. London' answer to the threat which this involved has been the pouring of millions of pounds sterling into harbor improvements.

The new entrance lock is 1,000 feet long, 110 feet wide and 45½ feet deep, or roomy enough to handle the 915-foot length of the S.S. Majestic with plenty of space to spare. The new landing stage, which floats in the river, is 1,142 feet long and lies 170 feet from the concrete "shore" which has been built upon what used to be mud flats. Poised on 60 steep pontoons, the floating stage is connected with the customs hall and railway station by five bridges for foot and motor traffic.

A 750-foot drydock, capable of being lengthened to 1,000 feet without interference with operation, is also under construction, and will be ready by spring.

Health Education

Times of Ceylon: In the present state of knowledge of the masses, however, it is incumbent upon Government and upon voluntary workers to enforce a progressive policy. The general body of the population have not sufficient knowledge and vision to insist upon medical and sanitary measures which will bring improved health and prosperity. Fortunately, the Governor has indicated that, in spite of the financial stress of the moment, Government will strive to maintain continuity of progress in its medical policy. Expenditure on medical and sanitary services was one of the last things which they would wish to reduce.

One reads frequent accounts of women coming to the front in almost every field of work. Can it be that they are tired of merely being the power behind the throne, and have decided to be queens in their own right?

There is Music Everywhere

O, there is music everywhere,
An all-pervading harmony,
In every sound that stirs the air,
There throbs a note of melody.

There rolls thro' every roaring street,
The rhythm of an epic rhyme;
The sounding stream of human feet
Moves on to music's perfect time.

In every silence there are chords,
Subtle and soft as strands of rain;
In sounds, akin to song, our words
Flow from our lips, a varied strain.

The soul that tunes the perfect ear,
Dissolves all discord into air,
And in the heart of things can hear
Nothing but music everywhere.

Scots Sabbath is Passing, Says Laird

London.—Presiding at the annual meeting of the Scottish Sabbath Protection Association in Glasgow recently, Sir Archibald Campbell, of Succoth, Bart., stated that there was a tremendous tide setting in against the observance of the Lord's Day. The chief offenders, he said, were those who could get their pleasure on almost every day of the week.

The Rev. David Watson, moving a resolution to the effect that that meeting opposed everything that would destroy the sacredness and rest of the Sabbath Day, said that the railway companies, by offering cheaper fares than on ordinary days, incited the people to travel and secularize the Sabbath. There also existed a municipal menace. Why did their civic fathers seeks to lure the people to golf and bowls? In reference to excursions he stated that he could give many incidents where, at the instigation of the Roman Catholic Church special exercusion trains had been run on the Sabbath Day.

REVERENCE

The more a naturalist studies Nature ,the more mysterious she becomes to him. "So God grows more sublime and awful as we labor for Him in the tasks which He has set us," says Phillips Brooks. "Would you grow rich in reverence?" he asks. "Go work, work, work with all your strength; so let life deepen around you and display its greatness."

Suitor—"I came to ask you for your daughter's hand."

Father—"Have you any money, my young man?"

Suitor—"Sure thing. How high do you quote her?"

Tolls of Death in European Storm

Five Members of Crew of Finnish Schooner Are Drowned

London.—Man's efforts to conquer the seas brought additional tales of death and rescue from various parts of storm-ravaged Europe during the past week in England and Europe.

Five members of the crew were drowned and six rescued from the Finninsh schooner Draken near Uto, Finland. The Draken was smashed on the rocks during a gale on Sunday night, and more than 24 attempts at rescue failed because of high seas.

Thousands of nets were lost by British fishing fleets which set out before storm warnings reached them on Monday.

A Lowestoft report said 200 Scottish drifters lost 6,600 nets and that the fishermen might be forced to abandon their work. Two drifters sank with the loss of three lives.

Four hundred Yarmouth drifters lost 20,000 nets, valued at $750,000.

A violent tempest swept numerous sections of France Tuesday, ravaging shipping and destroying nets and small boats.

The Italian steamer Arborea landed at Civita Vecchia with the pilot and wireless operator of a Marseilles-to-Algiers plane, the third forced down on the Mediterranean in two weeks without loss of life. The two Frenchmen of the plane's crew were at the point of exhaustion from starvation and exposure when rescued.

The Garthpool, last survivor of British four-masted ships of the last century, ran ashore at East Sandhead, on the west coast of Africa, and was believed likely to be a total wreck. Its crew were saved.

Save the Birds

Cape Argus: Let us, before it is too late, do all we can to preserve this wonderful bird life of ours by the reservation of sanctuaries and by teaching school children to protect rather than destroy. Let us distribute literature in schools and to farmers on the economic value of birds. Why is there not a Chair of Ornithology in all our universities?

Instead of rushing into print with ill-considered judgments on the precise significance of the British Prime Minister's visit to this country, we prefer to wait until we can read the whole truth in the Moscow Pravda and Isviestia.

A young hoad-hog known for his determination never to be overtaken was going at great speed one day when he heard an insistent 'honking" behind him. He turned and saw, just on his hind wheels, a baby car driven by a wild-looking individual. Back he turned to his wheel, down went the accelerator pedal, and up rushed the speed indicator. Seventy — eigthy miles an hour were touched, but still the hooting continued. At last, worn out, the speed maniac slowed down and drew to the side of the road. "Come on, then, if you must pass," he cried. "I'm sorry," said the driver of the baby car, "but I'm hooked on."

Volcano, Quakes Alarm Planters In Costa Rica

Ash Eruptions From Irazu and Mild Earth Tremors Felt Throughout Republic

San Jose, Costa Rica—Iesidents of Cartago and other small cities which lie at the foot of the volcano Irazu, as well as coffee planters and dairymen who live on its slopes, are greatly alarmed by recent eruptions of ashes from the craters of Costa Rica's most active volcano, and mild earth tremors which have bee felt in practically the entire republic. These, it is believed, are caused by Irazu.

The volcano rises to a height of 11,500 feet above sea level, and has three craters, two of which are active. The third, although less than a hundred yards from its mates, has been inactive since 1910, when earthquakes caused the activity of the others. These craters are situated in a bowl more than half a mile across, which also contains a small lake formed by rainfall and water draining into it. The lake is situated about two hundred yards from the craters.

The craters of Irazu can be eached only by a thee-hour climb on horseback over a trail which winds along the slopes of the mountain for about twenty-five kilometers. Upon reaching a height of approximately 10,000 feet one can see practically the whole of this tiny republic.

Limon, which is the Caribbean port, and Puntarenas, on the Pacific Coast, can both be seen on a clear day. Also, the San Juan River, which forms the boundary between Costa Rica and Ilcaragua, and a number of silvery lakes in the neighboring republic, are visible from the peak.

Thus the only boundary of the country not visible from the volcano is that of Panama, the view of which is shut off by a range of mountains, some peaks of which are slightly higher than Irazu.

The trip to the craters must be made during the early hours of the morning to view the surrounding country, because clouds usually form in the valley and rise to the slopes of the volcano shortly after sunrise, and because rain frequently falls on the mountainside after noon. Frost forms practically every night, and small shrubbery and coarse grass are the only vegetation above an altitude of 10,000 feet.

It is not strange that the inhabitants of cities and plantations in the vicinity of the volcano are alarmed by the recent activity of Irazu. Since 1723, when the first City of Cartago was destroyed by eruptions and strong earthquakes, the countryside has suffered on five occasions, in 1756, 1822, 1831, 1888 and 1910.

The sides of the active craters are now covered with a yellowish-green coating of sulphur which forms from the fumes emitting from their mouths. Inasmuch as a strong prevailing wind blows from the north, the southern rim of te bowl is approximately 500 feet higher than any other side, caused by ashes which have settled.

Trees and vegetation to te south of the crater for a distance of more than five miles are withered by the coat of volcanic ash and sulphur fumes carried by the wind.

A noise like the breaking of waves on a rocky coast is heard inside the craters, evidently aroused by the boiling lava.

The volcanic ashes which have settled on the southern rim of the craters are packed by daily rains, which have washed gullies in the sofe mass resembling the topography of the surrounding mountainous and broken countryside.

"I'm so sleepy I can hardly hold my eyes open."

"Here's my dressmaker's bill. I guess that will open them."

THE ART OF HAPPINESS

The art of being happy is the art of discovering the depths that lie in the daily common things.—Brierley.

Daniel Guggenheim has given a final $500,000 to his fund for the promotion of aviation, which he says is no longer in need of such sponsorship. Evidently he believes aviation can now stand on its own legs.

Dog Stories

"Some years ago, when I was living at home with my parents in Wales," writes a Billericay reader, "we had a big black dog—only a mongrel, but most intelligent. I had an aunt, who was bed-ridden, living about two miles from our place. I do not know how or why it began, but the dog in question used to go regularly every morning to the bedside of my aunt and put up his paws on the side of the bed in front of her, remaining there for a few minutes. This went on for some months.

"At last my aunt died about 10.30 p.m. The dog did not go the following morning, but remained at home looking very miserable, and did not seem to care about his food. On the day of the funeral he put in an appearance again arriving just in time to join the procession, followed all the way—about three miles, watched the coffin being lowered into the grave, then left us and went home all alone."

A Bournemouth reader writes: "An Aberdeen terrier who lived near us used to call every morning at 8 a.m. and bark for my Highland terrier, who was always waiting for him. They played on the lawn till breakfast time, when they parted. Then the Aberdeen's owner moved a long way aff, and the dog could no longer come to play.

"One evening the telephone bell rang, and my wife, having answered it, came back saying in a low voice: 'Poor old Laddie is dead.' To our astonishment our dog raised himself up, threw up his head, and howled dismally—a thing he had never done before. Next day I went to call on Laddie's owner. Always before, my dog, when in sight of the house, would rush on in front, seeking his friend, with whom he would play during my call. On this occasion, Mac kept close to my heels all the time I was there, and would not move when Laddie's name was mentioned."

Surgeon Rear-Admiral Burniston writes. "You may have heard of Joey, the famous bulldog belonging to H.M.S. Queen Elizabeth. One day going down to the sick-bay, I saw Joey sitting in a corner of the dispensary looking utterly miserable, with the tears running down his usually cheerful ugly face. I asked the sick berth steward what was the matter, and he told me that when Joey considered a dose of castor oil would be good for him he came to the dispensary and sat as he was doing until he got his dose.

So saying, the steward poured out a liberal dose of oil and went over to Joey, who, looking more miserable than ever, opened his mouth to have the nauseous dose poured down his throat. He would not drink it on his own. Having had his medicine he licked his lips and shuffled up on deck.

When at Rosyth he used to land with the liberty men and go up to Edinburgh in their train, where he would amuse himself until it was time for the train to return, when he would join up and come off in the liberty boat.

"Some years ago," writes a correspondent, "an Irish friend told me—apropos of that strange sense some dogs seem to possess—of a spaniel he had which was accustomed to follow him everywhere with his gun. When Mr. S. left home to go to college, he gave the old dog to his married brother, who had a place some two miles away.

"The first time Mr. S. returned home there was a scratching and whining outside the sunroom door, and there was the spaniel waiting, as much as to say, 'Here am I, master, where is your gun?' Each subsequent visit the same thing happened, whether he was expected or not. Within a few moments of his arrival old Nell would present herself at the door of the sunroom and remain during his visit, though she was perfectly content in her new quarters while he was away. How could she know he was there?"

"E.M.M." writes: "We once had two fox terriers, trained from puppies when naughty to 'go into the corner' as a punishment. It was the habit (though rather a bad one) in the family circle, to put hot dishes down at the fireside to keep warm for late comers. On one occasion, fried bacon being part of the menu and the usual custom adopted, the breakfast room was left by the maid with the dogs as the only occupants.

"Imagine the surprise of the first comer down to see the remains of the dogs' disturbed meal (our bacon) scattered about the hearth-rug, and the two dogs each standing up begging for mercy, one in each corner of the room! Have dogs consciences?"

"At one time," writes a correspondent. "I kept a lot of pigs: about a hundred Gloster Spots, of all sizes, and they grazed about the fields in one big herd.

"My Cairn terrier one day was looking out of the French window when he began to bark. All the pigs were busily grazing in the home field, and I could see nothing to excite him. However, his barking got more furious, so I opened the window, when he dashed out, sprinted across the garden and into the midst of the pigs. He singled one out, drove it through the field, and never left it until it was squealing up the road."—"London Morning Post."

Postage Rates

Jamaica Times: The reason for keeping up the foreign postage rates, recently given by the authorities, is that the public revenue would suffer by too large an amount if they were materially reduced. That is what is seen—it is the unseen which is lost sight of. Even if only what is on the surface be considered it is clear that the Post Office should never be used for profit-taking. For as this column has continually pointed out, the mail is but a road between you and me and the next man. And just as an enlightened policy long ago took down the toll-gates on the turnpike roads, so should every block be taken out of the way to give the cheapest possible intercommunication by mail.

CONCERNING CHRISTMAS BUYING

At this season, when many persons are casting about for a suitable Christmas present to give a relative or friend, too often the selection is made out of an out-of-town firm s catalogue, and the local merchant is not even considered in the transaction. During the past few weeks many Christmas catalogues and circulars have been distributed through the mails advertising goods offered by city firms. The catalogues and circulars are attractively gotten up, and at considerable expense. Their cost is fully considered when the firms make up their price lists, and they make sure that those who nibble at their bait will pay for their publication.

We ask, in all fairness, would it not be better for all intending purchasers to assist the local stores and take the trouble to look around, make inquiry, and find out if they cannot get the very same goods, or something just as good, from their home merchant.

We know that those who have in the past adopted this plan when purchasing their Christmas presents, have been well satisfied with their decision. Not only that, but they have put their dollars in local circulation, and thus they are doubly benefited. Their money comes back to them in an indirect way. They are loyal to their home town and are setting a good example to others.

Consult the advertisements in the Press, visit the local stores, make inquiry from the merchants and see if they cannot satisfy your most exacting desires and at prices just as reasonable as any catalogue merchants can. Suppose you try it this season.

ENCOURAGING INDUSTRIES

Almost every town and village is anxious and willing to encourage some outside industry, or help establish some new industry to locate within their borders. Too often in their anxiety to attract something new, a small and struggling local industry is completely over-looked, and while reaching out for something that is visionary, the thing of substance, something real, is lost sight of. If local capital, instead of being placed in speculative mines and oil wells, was invested in some local enterprise, the result to the investor and to the community would be most helpful and beneficial.

This can be brought about only by organization. If local business men would consult together, would exchange ideas, would make suggestions, some very beneficial results would follow.

The fire of the Beach Furniture Factory has proved a considerable loss to the business life of Winchester. That industry might have been in full operation here again if it had been taken hold of in a determined and energetic manner. To-day furniture is being brought to Winchester, from factories located in small towns in Western Ontario, that could be just as well manufactured here, and give employment to many men. There is no reason why such an industry should not be re-established here. We have plenty of electric power and at reasonable cost.

There are other industries that might be established here, if our business men would but bestir themselves and get together. Two or three small industries are better than one large one. We have as good a right to have them as any other place. The Press would like to see some action taken in the way suggested.

PERSONAL LIBERTY

When the O. T. A. was in force in Ontario, there was much talk about personal liberty. It was argued that prohibition was an infringement on the personal liberty of the subject, therefore unfair and should not be tolerated. It is claimed that anything can be proved by figures, and we know that one lawyer can turn and twist the evidence in a case so that black becomes white and wrong becomes right. Now as to this personal liberty, we wonder what its advocates of four years ago think of the proposed action of the Ontario Government in taking away from a subject the right to purchase the liquor they offer for sale, and the right to drive a car because he has taken too much of the liquor they sold him. This personal liberty question is many sided, and so far as the liquor interests are concerned, may be argued any way to suit their purpose.

ABOUT PUBLIC HEALTH

Blessings to humanity do not come because they are asked for, or even wished for, but because some one goes after them and interests others in bringing them. For some years past there has been more or less of an agitation in this county for trained nurses, or what are known as public health nurses, whose duty it is to visit our schools, inspect the sanitary conditions, and the health as well as sanitary conditions of the pupils, to report and have corrected defective eyesight, deafness, trouble from tonsils, and any tendency toward tuberculosis, also their teeth.

Strange to say there is a very considerable opposition to the employment of such nurses in certain sections. Not the that necessity does not exist, but because of the extra expense. At least that is what one must infer when those opposed attempt to give their reasons. No price is too high to pay for good health, and no blessing can be bestowed on a child equal to a sound body, good eyesight, good hearing and a clear mind. The splendid work being done in other communities by this public nurse system is well known, and where those nurses have been at work for a year or more, the communities are so well served and satisfied that they would not let them go if they cost twice the amount.

To employ a public nurse to work in the district of Chesterville, Winchester township, Winchester village and Mountain township would cost such a trifle to each ratepayer that it is hardly worth mentioning

At a meeting of the Federation of Women's Institutes in Ontario, held at Toronto last week, "a public nurse in every County within two years" was the objective set out by that splendid organization. The Women's Institutes of this County could not undertake a better work than the promotion of this cause.

DRUNKEN DRIVERS

Since the Ontario election the daily press in general has given much attention to the menace of the drinking as well as drunken drivers of automobiles. If the campaign, put on by the prohibitionists, has had no other effect it has done much to stir up public opinion against the man who drives a car after having taken a glass or two of intoxicating liquor. It is unnecessary to point out the danger to public life from a drunken driver. Every day the newspapers record some fatal accident, the result of the driver of a car having imbibed too freely. And now the Ontario Government has been aroused to this awful danger, and that legislation is promised that will not only debar the man, who is convicted of driving a car when drinking liquor, from securing another license to drive, but it will cancel his permit to obtain liquor. Of course the latter means only a little inconvenience to the person who wants liquor, because he can obtain it easily enough without a permit, and as much as he wants. But the point is this: The evil of intoxicating liquor is admitted even by the authorities who distribute it, and to satify those who desire to stimulate or stifle their evil or better impulses by the use of intoxicants, the general public is to be protected by as drastic legislation as can be put in effect.

It is not always the drunken driver that is the most dangerous to public safety. When a man is really intoxicated, he either makes a quick wreck of his car or goes to sleep on the side of the road. It is the chap who has a glass or two, and is feeling gay, that is the greatest driver. He becomes stimulated to a dangerous degree, and is so reckless and daring that he will even run into danger for the added excitement. The safest man is the man who does not touch liquor.

Harold N. Beach Wins Contest for Older Boys' Parliament

Last Saturday brought to a close a somewhat strenuous campaign for the two candidates who were contesting the County of Dundas for the Ninth Older Boys Parliament which meets in Toronto at the Provincial Parliament Buildings during the Christmas holidays.

The contestants, Eric C. Barwick of Chesterville, and Harold N. Beach, are both well and favorably known and both had platforms to present to their constituents that would have done credit to those of much maturer years,

Certain qualifications are necessary before the nomination papers can be filled. The candidate must be a member of some christian church, a non-smoker, a total abstainer from all intoxicating liquors. He must have held some office in his local group, and must be between the ages of 16 and 21.

Ever since the nomination which was held on Nov. 9th, both candidates have worked hard. Meetings were held at Williamsburg. Morrisburg, Iroquois, Dundela, Chesterville and Winchester. True to the ideals of the Trail Ranger and Tuxis program, both contestants stated emphatically that no matter who won out on polling day, the voters could depend upon it that the loser would support the winner to the limit of his ability, in promoting every phase of Boys' Work throughout the County.

The returning officer, Rev. J A. Waddell of Winchester, had arranged for polls at Chesterville, Iroquois Morrisburg, Dundela. Williamsburg and Winchester, and on Saturday morning at 9 a. m , the 'Battle of the Ballots was begun.

Printed ballots such as are used in a Provincial or general elections, had been provided and the regular ballot box used for the occasion. It was interesting indeed to watch these "future makers of Canada" as they entered the polls, and cast their ballot for the boy who would represent them in the Council of the Boys Parliament. To the credit of the Boys of the County, there was only one spoiled ballot. It was a great day and despite the raging snow storm, the enthusiasm was marvellous

The polls were closed at 4 o'clock and when the returns were completed, it was found that Harold N. Beach, the Pretor of "The Knights of Honor" group in the United Church, was the successful candidate. Hearty congratulations have been pouring in from all sides to this youthful campaigner, and the Press and many other friends join in hearty felicitations.

Harold, or "Cherry" as he is familiarly known among the gang, will bring honor we are sure to his home town, and worthily represent the Boy Life of this splendid old County.

Sunday School Lesson

December 1. Lesson IX—The Christian Home in a Modern World, Luke 2: 40-52. Golden Text—Honour thy father and mother.—Epresians 6: 2.

ANALYSIS

I. THE CHILD IN THE HOME, Deut. 6: 3-9; Luke 2: 40-52; 2 Tim. 1: 3-5; 3: 14, 15.
II. SANCTITY OF HOME RELATIONS, Mat. 19: 3-9; Eph. 6: 1-9.
III. 3œ8|:9 (9 9œ5 9(8.5, Luke 24: 28-32.

INTRODUCTION— Revealing glimpses of home life are not infrequent in the Bible, sometimes unatractive and evil, sometimes rarely beautiful, always instructive. Only a few examples can be iven here, some merely by suggestion rather than description in detail. There is Abraham of whom the Lord says, "I have known him t. the end that he may command his children and his household after him, that they may keep the way of the Lord," Gen. 20: 19. There is the hospitable tent-home of Jethro in Midian where Moses, the fugitive, is welcomed, Exod. 2: 20, 21. In the home of Micah, in the hill country of Ephraim, with his chapel, his altar, and his priest; there is real, though uninstructed, piety. In Samuel's childhood home a devoted mother prays for her son. The home life of Hosea is poisoned by unfaithfulness, but redeemed and healed by a changeless and self-denying love, Hos., chs. 2 and 3. Very memorable is the dignity and order of the household of the virtuous woman of Proverbs (ch. 31), whose "price is far above rubies," and whose children "rise up and call her blessed."

In the New Testament, individual character stands out more prominently than social or family life, but we have frequent reference to the virtues which make a good home—kindness, purity, hospitality, humility, dilligence, patience, fidelity, charity. It is under the influence and power of the Lord Jesus Christ that the perfection and beauty of home life has been attained.

I. THE CHILD IN THE HOME, Deut. 6: 3-9; Luke 2: 40-52; 2 Tim. 1: 3-5; 3: 14, 15.

The ancient law preserved in Deuteronomy requires both that the people shall keep the commandments of God, and that they shall teach them to their children, ch. 6: 1, 2, 7.. With this good law goes the promise of the blessing of God, v. 3. With it also goes the great central truth of religion, "The Lord our God is one Lord," and the summing up of all religious duty in the one great commandment, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might." These, therefore, are to be kept as a sacred inheritance, this fundamental thuth and this comprehensive law, and taught to the children in the home. Apparently there is to be no excuse for neglect, and no evasion of this duty. All occasions are to be used, and both the parent and the home will be marked by the symbols of its obedience, vs. 7-9. The language of these verses is probably to be understood as figurative, but many Jews have taken it literally and have actually worn on the arm and forehead strips of parchment on which were written words of the law, and have enclosed similar pieces of parchment in metal or wooden cases nailed to the doorpost (see Matt. 23: 5).

There is no doubt that Jesus was brought up in a pious home where the precepts of the ancient religion were strictly observed. He grew and waxed strong in spirit, filled with disdom, Luke 2: 40. At twelve years of age he was taken by his parents to the springtime festival of the Passover at Jerusalem. In this story (vs. 41-50), two things seem clear, first that he had become keenly interested in what he had learned of the temple and its worship, and second, that for so young a boy he had a most devout and real interest in religion. Coming with a fresh mind to the great questions of his religious faith and practice, he seizes the opportunity to learn what he can from the temple doctors who were astonished at his understanding. Absorbed in this higher interest he was, for the moment, forgetful of the day appointed to return home. But his parents, he thought, would have known. "Wist ye not," he said, "that I must be in my Father's House?" v. 49, Rev. Ver. Jesus is resented to us as a healthy, normal boy, well instructed, keenly interested in the best things, of unusual mental ability, obedient, and well thought of by those who knew him—a good all-round boy, owing much to a good home.

We are fortunate in learning from Paul something of the early life of his much-beloved younger friend, Timothy, whom, he says, he remembers in his prayers night and day, 2 Tim. 1: 3. Timothy's faith as, in some measure, an inheritance from his grandmother, Lois, and his mothe, Eunice. From a child he had known the holy scriptures, and Paul counsels him affectionately to continue in the reading and study of them. There is no better definition of the place and value of the Bible in the life of a child or a man than that given by Paul ch. 3: 14, 15.

II. SANCTITY OF HOME RELATIONS, Mat. 19: 3-9; Eph. 6: 1-9.

There is good counsel here regarding three fundamental home relations, that of husband and wife, that of parents and children, that of master and servant—counsel in which is summed up the wisdom of the ages. To the mind of Jesus the relation of husband and wife is sacred and is divinely ordained. The Jews would have involved him if they could in one of the controversies of the time. One of their schools, that of Shammai, taught that a man could put away his wife for serious misconduct only. The other, the school of Hillel, held that he could "do so for any reason, for example, a spoiled dinner, or a physical defect," Peake's Commentary. Jesus admits only one sufficient cause for divorce, and frankly brands remarriage in any other case as adultery, Matt. 19: 3-9.

On the part of children, obedience and honor, on the part of parents patience and wise instruction—these are the homely virtues to which Paul exhorts his readers. As for servants, he counsels honest and single-minded service to their masters, remembering that before all else they are servants of Christ, who will receive their recompense from the Lord. The attitude of masters toward those who serve should be the same, forbearing threatening, holding all good work in honor, remembering that they, too, are servants of a Master in heaven, Eph. 6: 1-9.

III. CHRIST AT THE TARLE, Luke 24: 28-32.

The kindly hospitality of the two disciples was richly rewarded when they learned that the stranger whom they entertained was the Lord himself.

Dewar Asks War Be Delayed Till Debts Are Paid

British Peer From Scotland Hurls Barrage of Witticisms at Chemists' Dinner

Takes Fling at Football Also Declares Any Speaker Can "Gas" His Audience

London.—Lord Dewar, who is even more celebrated for his epigrams than for his whiskey, and who is said to have put out more wise cracks than George Bernard Shaw, revealed his panacea for war in a speech recently at the annual chemical dinner here.

"Within ten years' time," he said, "chemistry and airships should make war impossible. Present-day defences on both land and sea may become obsolete before nations can agree on disarmament Naval disarmaments are good, but when you get rid of one trouble another always appears The way to outlaw war is to eliminate the cause of war. One way to abolish wars for all time would be to agree to postpone the next conflict until World War debts are all paid. Chemistry and the Gospel have done more for civilization and the well being of mankind than any other phase of human activity."

Crop of Epigrams

The following are among the latest crop of Dewarisms of this epigrammatical Scotchman:

"Some electrify their audiences and others only gas them."

"Chemists can gas an audience."

"I should like to be a chemist now."

"A combined saxophone-bagpipe has been invented—chemists also discovered Nu-lethal gas recently."

"There seems to be no finality in the discoveries in chemistry. You have been able to make two hairs grow where only one grew before."

"No man can tell the number of blondes the Imperial Chemical Industries have made for the benefit of mankind. Was it Shakespeare whose gentlemen preferred blondes? But we must not forget that the black sheep of the family isn't always a blond."

"Football and chemistry run in families."

"Whether genius is transmissible or not in the world is chemistry's question but all authorities agree as to gout."

"The goal of every man is to make money faster than his family can spend it—there are no idle rich today so many are chasing them to get their worldly goods."

Inventions Still Lacking

"Man to-day can fly like a bird, but man will never be able to sit comfortably on a barbed wire fence."

"Man is the noblest work of God, but nobody ever said so but man himself."

"Still you have yet to invent a fertilizer which will make lawn seed grow half an inch and then stop."

Lord Dewar said that the distiller's company to which he belonged had gone in for the production of bodies containing alcohol as required in certain industries. "You must not elope with the idea," he said, "that we only cater to the inner man. Consumption of alcohol in that direction is decreasing so rapidly that we are casting our bread upon other waters. Cast your bread upon the waters and you will realize how many people are after it."

Hard to Explain

Dead Woman's White Lilies Turn to Crimson as Relict Expires

Swansea, England.—The weird blossoming of a dead woman's flowers has furnished the town of Swansea with a mystery which seems destined never to be solved. The story is told as follows:

Several years ago, Mrs. Alfred Jeffs, a prominent resident, died suddenly. She had been fond of flowers, especially lilies. Immediately after her death several white lilies in her garden suddenly stopped blooming. Her husband gave them to a gardener, who tended them carefully, but they remained barren and flowerless.

A few days ago the plants bloomed again, as suddenly as they had ceased flowering. The flowers, however, instead of being white, were a deep crimson.

The gardener, amazed by the sudden change, hurried to tell Jeffs. When he arrived at the house, he found that Jeffs had died the same day.

Theatre Audience Applauds Ruler

His Majesty "Steals Show" From Actors at Drury Lane

London.—King George went to a theatre recently for the first time since his illness, and "stole the show" from the actors themselves.

Accompanied by Queen Mary and the Duke and Duchess of York, he went to the Drury Lane theatre to see the American production, "Rose Marie."

His entrance brought the audience to its feet in a prolonged tumultuous cheer. The monarch, looking fit and bronzed, waved his hand and smiled happily. The cheering continued, delaying the raising of the curtain.

After the performance the audience sang "God Save the King," while the King bowed his acknowledgment.

He was cheered again by a large crowd on leaving the theatre.

If the five powers can meet on the five points when they come together for naval reduction, there will be no question as to the outcome.

FAILURE

There could hardly be a more dismal confession of moral and intellectual failure than to admit that our leisure hours hang so heavy on our hands that we must needs escape from our own empty-headedness by betting on a football match or a horse race.—Dean Inge.

Massey Reviews Canada's Growth

Minister to United States Addresses American Steel Men

LIGNITE COAL FIND

Metallic Mining Industry Figures Doubled in Five Years

Biloxi, Miss.—Canada and the United States are "sewn together physically by threads of steel," the Canadian Minister, Hon. Vincent Massey, pointed out to the American Institute of Steel Construction here recently. The Minister drew the attention of the members, who are assembled here for their annual convention, to the fact that 45 railway lines cross the international line. He estimated that by the use of the steel-framed motor car American visitors to the number approximating the population of the Dominion, yearly crossed into Canada and a proportionate quota of tourists came south.

"It is difficult to see how anything but mutual knowledge and understanding can exist when two neighbors see each other as easily as we do," he said, remarking on the steel bridges which span the international waterways, one of which, the Ambassador Bridge, linking Detroit and Windsor, was recently completed at a cost of $20,000,000. The Minister said: "There are frontiers where greater amounts are spent, and more steel manufactured for the purpose, not of letting people in, but of keeping them out."

Mr. Massey warned his hearers it was not possible to ask a Canadian to speak in this particular era without incurring the risk of hearing a few facts at least about "how your northern neighbor is getting on."

PROGRESS IN CANADA.

"But perhaps," he continued, "you will be more charitable to my expression of national pride when I offer as a significant evidence of the progress we are making in Canada, and the fact that we are producing and using more structural steel. According to the latest estimate, that of last year, the tonnage of fabricated steel shapes for construction purposes increased by fully one-half over that of the previous year. The capital invested in this branch of the industry rose about one-seventh during the year, and the value of the production was 25 per cent. greater than the previous record year."

Canada, the Minister said, was rolling back the curtains which had hitherto hidden the possibilities of the north. As an instance of this he mentioned the recent discovery of a deposit of lignite coal within 60 miles of Hudson Bay. In Canada metallic mining industries alone, in five years the figures had doubled, representing capital and men employed and the net value of the product.

Mentioning the estalbishment of research foundations by the Dominion Government and the Government of Ontario, the Minister said steel manufacturers would be interested in their efforts to bring into commercial use the great deposits of iron ore in Ontario. The Federal Foundation had addressed itself to utilization of the coal found in western Canada, the Province of Alberta actually having 14 per cent. of the world's supply of the mineral.

INSURANCE DOUBLED.

"Well, gentlemen," he said, "I could, if my conscience would let me, give you plenty of figures to show a dramatic advancement on the part of your northern neighor. I could dwell on the fact that the life insurance in Canada has nearly doubled in seven years, and that the development of water power shows a corresponding increase in the same period. But statistics have no place in an after-dinner speech. Like children, they are better seen than heard. Let me mention just one activity of the special interest to you. A very sure index of prosperity and confidence is to be found in the figures of construction. Last year's industrial construction represented an investment of 58 per cent. greater than the year before, and in the last seven years the figures covering general building contracts have increased by nearly 100 per cent.

"You may be interested to know that we have become skyscraper addicts in Canada, and now to show it in Toronto we are erecting the tallest building in the British Empire."

Developing the theme of the skyscraper as a symbol of modern western civilization, the Minister said he preferred to believe the constructive instinct was stronger in the human race than the instinct of destruction. "Grateful as we are for the utility and efficiency of this era of steel," he said, "we should be happy that its creations in an increasing degree show a recognition that beauty, too, has its place in everyday life."

Vancouver Port Will Establish New High Record

Western Harbor Anticipates Huge Increase in Shipping Business

Vancouver, B.C.—Nothing can prevent Vancouver from breaking all her records as an exporting Port following telegrams received here by relatives from seamen and officers of ships now en route here for grain.

The ships have not been posted, being freighters, but they are coming for grain cargoes.

They will prove to the world that Canada is not an ice-bound country dependent on movement over the Great Lakes or through eastern channels.

These ships will take grain to Europe when Europe requires grain most. The demonstration will be convincing.

Vancouver has elevators lining the water-front full of grain and in the interior there are more elevators.

As the coast elevators are emptied they will be filled with more grain and the movement can proceed until all orders are filled.

Recent flurries in price did not affect Vancouver grain.

But the Port is arranging to handle a record arrival of ships in the near future.

"Does your wife object to your smoking?"

"Yes; she says we both can't afford to."

Ill-Fated Ring Of Hapsburgs Put on Exhibit

Tragedy Followed Use of Maria Theresa's Wedding Band by Rudolf's Bride

Vienna.—It is a popular tradition that marriage rings should not be used twice. That there is something in it is proved by the rings which were made for the wedding of Empress Maria Theresa to Emperor Franz I and used a second time at the wedding of Crown Prince Rudolf with Princess Stefanie of Belgium.

The eight years of Rudolf's married life were filled with matrimonial strife and ended with the drama of the hunting lodge of Mayerling, when the Crown Prince shot his friend, Baroness Vetsera, and then made an end to his own life. These rings are shown in the newly opened "Ecclesiastical Treasury," whose famous collections has been enlarged by the "Treasure of the Capuchines," which hitherto was not accessible to the public.

The monastery of the Capuchines held a privileged position under the Hapsburgs, who were baptized by Capuchine monks and buried in the monastery's vaults in the Neuer Market, in the heart of the city. In recognition of the many services of the monks to the imperial family, the latter made them precious gifts, and individual Hapsburgs bequeathed them art works and sacred objects.

SACRED RELICS ON DISPLAY.

In the monastery the gifts were added to the treasury to remain there entombed like their donors, until after the revolution when the treasures were handed over to the state, which has added them to the ecclesiastical exhibition in the former imperial palace.

Some quaint mementos including the eliquaries of the pious Empress Anna, are in the collection. There is a tree of embossed gold, which bears as fruit little receptacles containing teeth and other relics of saints. The receptacles hold relics of the Virgin Mother, it is said, also of St. Peter, the founder of the church; St. Catherine, St. Joseph and St. Christophoros.

Another reliquary of the same empress has the shape of a miniature altar, richly ornamented with gold and set with precious stones. In the centre is a picture showing the flagellation of Christ and the setting up of the crown of thorns.

SUCCESS

It is no success to build up a fortune without a character; but it is the highest success to build up a character, and the fortune naturally goes with it.

MacDonald Talks On American Trip

Premier Says People of U.S. Now Understand British

SON SUPPORTS JAPAN

London.—Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald told the National Labor Club that "The American people are understanding us."

The audience, which crowded the Friends' Meeting House, cheered his various references to the new Anglo-American friendship. The Prime Minister stater that "in my whole life I never met eople who can be more enthusiastic in the welcome they give a stranger than the people of Canada and the United States have shown themselves to be. It was great.

"We went out to the States and a number of people gave us solemn warning not to take the risk. But if there is a doctrine that I have been preaching insistently for a great number of years, it is the doctrine that you have to take risks in order to get peace. I took them, and I think I was wholly justified in doing so."

Son in Japan

Tokio.—Malcolm B. MacDonald, Labor member of the British Parliament and son of Prime Minister J. Ramsay MacDonald, declared himself very much impressed with the presentation of Japan's case with regard to Manchuria as placed before the Institute of Pacific Relations, now in session at Kioto, by Yosuke Matsuoka, former vice-president of the South Manchuria Railway.

Although he recognizes China's discontent with the present situation in Manchuria, Mr. MacDonald said there was a great deal of merit in the Japanese viewpoint. He believes that the difficulties between China and Japan could be settled if a mixed commission would get together and discuss frankly the two countries' mutual roblems.

China was selected to be host to the next conference of the Institute, two years hence, but the Chinese city in which the session will be held was not chosen. Dr. David Yui, leader of the Chinese delegation, was elected chairman of the next conference. The conference also accepted the resignation of J. Merle Davis, as secretary, although he will continue to serve until his successor is appointed.

Lord Hailsham, former Lord Chancellor of the United Kingdom and chairman of the British delegation at the conference, declared that arbitrary abolition of extra territoriality in China by decree of the Nanking Government on January 1, 1930, would be condemned by the whole world as an extreme breach of international law and as the greatest ossible proof that China was not ready for such rights. Patience, he said, is all China needs to gain her end in this matter.

Stolen Gems are Found By Police

Paris—A burglar who during the summer season broke into a dozen villas at Deauville, Le Touquet and Biarritz, and collected altogether about $280,000 worth of jewels, has been arrested in Paris.

A. M. Jacob, a cutter of precious stones, who frequently journeys between Paris and Amsterdam, was arrested at the Gare du Nord recently.

On him was found a diamond of 16 carats, valued at $40,000. He declared that he was cutting for a certain Okroun Daho. The latter, when arrested, admitted that he had carried out a dozen burglaries at select Normandy resorts.

A small valise which Daho had entrusted to a cafe keeper, and which was seized by the police, was found to contain $80,000 worth of jewels.

"Yes, indeed, in London I was presented at court."

"What did they charge you with?"

Farm Notes

Improving Herds and Flocks

On Illustration Stations operated by the Dominion Department of Agriculture as a part of the Experimental Farms System considerable attention is being directed to building up dairy herds on the stations and to developing good types of other livestock. The majority of the station operators are using purebred sires and many of the dairy and mixed farmers are keeping individual milk records and making butter-fat determinations in order to determine the production of each animal.

A study of the year's production of milk and fat on the different stations has revealed the need of the adoption of improved methods. In his report for last year the Supervisor of the illustration stations, published by the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, it is stated that the average production of butter-fat varies from 403 pounds to 121 pounds on the different stations. Indeed, on one of the farms it was found that the average yield per cow was only 774 pounds of butter fat. These results show the need, and possibilities of systematic breeding and selection.

On many of the stations the herds and flocks have been so built up as to make them valuable sources of breeding stock for the farmers in the district. During the past year it is noted by Mr. Moynan, the Supervisor, that the operators of Illustation Stations sold 266 head of cattle, 310 hogs and 202 sheep for breeding purposes.

Fertilizers for Potatoes

In the growing of potatoes on farms where stable manure is not plentiful commercial fertilizers of proper mixtures may be used with advantage. To demonstrate the value of commercial fertilizers when used singly and with manure potato fields on a number of the Illustration Stations operated by the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa were treated in different ways, side by side, with a section receiving 20 tons of farmyard manure to the acre. Other plots of similar land were treated with 10 tons of the manure, and 750 pounds of the feltilizer, and a third plot with 1500 pounds of chemical fertilizer and a fourth plot was left unfertilized. The fertilizer used was one made up of four parts each of nitrogen and potash, and eight parts of phosphoric acid.

These demonstrations were carried on for three years at eleven stations in Nova Scotia. The three year average yields were from the farmyard manure plot 201 bushels to the acre. The plots receiving manure and fertilizer 236 bushels to the acre, the plots receiving only the commercial fertilizer yielded 226 bushels to the acre, while the unfertilized plots gave less than 100 bushels.

From these tests it was shown that the greatest gains were obtained on the plots where both manure and chemical fertilizers were used. To arrive at the value of these fertilizers it was calculated that 55% of the cost of the fertilizer was charged to the potato crop and 45% to succeeding crops. On this basis it was found that the increased yield cost $9.73 per acre or on a bushel basis less than 8 cents.

Commenting on this demonstation Mr. C. J. Moynan, Chief Supervisor of the Illustration Stations, says in his report for 1928 that under practical farm conditions it would appear that soils low in fertility can be restored to a profitable basis by the limited use of a chemical fertilizer to supplement the necessary amount of plant food which cannot be supplied by farmyard manure.

Poultry Improvement Work

Illustration Stations distributed over the country and operated under the direction of the Experimental Farm at Ottawa, are having a fine influence on the improvement of poultry. In the Eastern Quebec stations four years ago there were only 374 purchased birds kept on the twenty stations then in operation. In the Report of the Supervisor of the stations for 1928 published by the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, it is shown that last year 1650 of the 1900 birds kept on twenty-two stations in the same part of the country were purebred and principally of the Barred Plymouth Rock breed.

The securing of these better birds has induced a number of the operators and adjoining farmers to improve their housing accommodation. On of the farms houses have been built to accommodate 250 birds and on other farms old buildings have been remodelled, making needed improvements in light and ventilation. The quality of the stock is being gradually improved by utilizing more and more purebred cockerels from stock which has produced 200 eggs or more in a year.

This work has so improved flocks as to make them breeding centres for the districts in which they are situated. During the year under review there were sold from these stations for breeding purposes 516 cockerels and 489 pullets. There were also sold 1631 settings of hatching eggs. — Issued by the Director of Publicity, Dom. Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Protecting Infant Industries

Sydney (Australia) Review: While it would be manifestly absurd to impose a high tariff with a view to attempting to raise in this country an exotic fruit, it is clear that a benficial industry in its initial stages may well need protection and an Empire economic conference such as is proposed by Lord Passfield might well decide where the line should best be drawn between these two extremes, enabling each portion of th Empire to produce that for which it is by nature most fitted with the assurance that its markets will not be closed to it by artificial barriers.

. . . if one slips . . . the call fails

THERE are three people to every telephone call. If any one of them makes a mistake the call fails. It may be the operator, it may be the person calling, it may be the person called.

There are over one million local calls in Ontario and Quebec every day which fail—"Line's Busy"—"No Answer"—"No one on the line now, sir"—"Wrong Number".

These uncompleted calls are a serious matter. They mean two million minutes a day wasted — congestion of traffic — constant irritation — a handicap to efficient service.

Some of these cannot be avoided and some of them are due to our own errors, and many of them are due to lack of co-operation by the other two parties.

*We are constantly reducing our own errors and we are constantly striving to give the best possible telephone service at lowest possible cost. As part of this effort we are now giving publicity to common faults in telephone usage in the hope that there may be mutual endeavour to secure and maintain maximum efficiency.

It takes three people to complete a call — if one makes a mistake, the call fails.

It is costing more than $27,000,000 this year to extend and improve telephone service in Ontario and Quebec.

SECRET OF HAPPINESS.

Famous Actress Left Stage to Serve the Poor.

One of the strangest stories in the world came to an end recently.

In 1868 there was born in Toulon a little girl called Eugenie Feneglie. She was orphaned in her childhood and tried to earn her living first as a shop assistant and then as a singer in cafes.

People liked her singing, and told her she should try her luck in Paris. She went to Paris poor and nameless. A manager gave the little provincial girl a part, and all Paris loved her. Fame and fortune paved her way with gold and flowers.

The most distinguished people cultivated her friendship. Great men begged her to interpret their plays. There was hardly anything the world can give which was denied her.

She was very beautiful, with a crown of curls and great shining eyes. She had grace of body and movement, and she was extremely intelligent.

Admiration followed her everywhere. Her photographs appeared constantly, articles were written about her clothes by one type of journalist, and about her art by another type.

The famous actress had called herself Eve Lavalliere. Suddenly Eve Lavalliere disappeared.

Her dazzling life had brought her no happiness. At first, like every stage-struck girl, she had thought it would be splendid to be famous. At first she had been as pleased with her jewels as a baby with its toys. But soon she was asking: "Is this all? I am not happy. When shall I begin to be happy?"

In the end she left Paris and set out in quest of happiness. She found it in a little village of the Vosges, where she lived a life of poverty, prayer, and service. If a poor man needed nursing or a sick woman wanted her house scrubbed, or a dying child wanted comfort, Eugenie Feneglie was at their beck and call.

After much searching her brilliant friends found her. They begged her to return to the city. All they could say was in vain.

"It will not last," people said. But years went on. For fifteen years the famous actress was the servant of the poor in her mountain village.

Now she has passed on to that world where heroes go, and people are recalling her genius and beauty, and wondering afresh why her fame brought her no happiness. But there are others who do not wonder, people working in hospitals and slums and in quiet villages. They know that the secret of happiness is to live for others.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

EXPERIENCES

I once visited the operating-room of a very noted hospital in Baltimore. The patient on the table had a small tumor or "lump" in her left breast. The surgeon talked softly as he divided the delicate tissues on his way to the offender, which he finally removed, and closed the wound.

"These things are not malignant," he murmured, "and this would never have given her trouble—did not need surgery, but she had read a lot of stuff—it was on her nerves; just had to have it out or go crazy"—and so on.

I had not been home ten days, when a young woman patron came into my office, with the same identical condition—a lump in her breast; somebody had told her those things were always cancerous—what did I think?

"Mary," I advised, "let it alone and quit being anxious; just you come in once a month for awhile, and I'll tell you what to do." She obeyed to the letter. I asked her ten days ago about the matter; the offender had disappeared—had not been felt for over two years. Hasty removal of the breast might have been disastrous, as the next case proves.

Over twenty years ago, a young wife discovered such a tumor in her breast. Much alarmed, she employed a "hit and run" surgeon, who removed the entire breast, and all the glands above it, though they were not enlarged—a capital operation.

Fifteen years later, she went to the most noted surgeon in our western country; one of the most capable and conservative operators in the country. He told the woman she was a permanent invalid, skin and bone—incurable—and that the hasty and unwise removal of her breast had caused it! In other words, she might be well and happy today, had the breast been let alone.

She has been dead now, more than a year. My moral is, don't do your own diagnosing of lumps that may appear in your breast. Consult your honest, capable family physician, who has your every interest in his heart. And this means in tumors of your breast; they may be dangerous, but happily not always.

"Very Latests"

By CECILE

Fashioned with charming femininity, the new evening dresses are sure to delight.

Panne velvet is a favorite material for these garments, true to the current vogue of velvets.

The long bodice shown in the illustration is vastly becoming. Softness and fulness are given by shirrings at each hip.

The U-decolletage is finished in black with a spray of self flowers. A square of the fabric applied in an uneven line at the hip gives a circular effect.

Black of chamois beige, fandango red or Alice blue, are among the favorite colors. But there are many other color possibilities and the charm of these new evening gowns is unquestioned.

* * *

Have you seen the new antelope-finished handbags? They have the popular zip-top fastening, beautiful tailoring and frosted trimmings. Some have silk moire lining with mirror and purse.

* * *

The cream of society has now become the pistachio cream. That much is apparent to any observer of the fashionable. Also, it is interesting to see how the new silhouette has taken possession of even the sport type of wear. In place of the familiar contours of other years, there are frocks with lengthened skirts, high waistlines and molded hips.

* * *

Green, green everywhere. It's popular for evening gowns, and just as much in demand for sports clothes. Even daytime frocks reflect a partiality for green. A new model is a charming emerald green silk crepe with elongated skirts in the back, a draped movement at the natural waistline which is accented by a bow of self material, and, lastly, a collar of light tan goergette.

* * *

Lounging pajamas of velvet are the mode's latest word. They are fitted affairs in black, gray, pink and white. Made with a flaring skirt, and a veriatble "coat tail" attached to the back. The wide trousers are executed in cream moire.

The Way of Life

By BRUCE BARTON

Sons

IN the autobiography of Benjamin Haydon, the painter who was the friend of Wordsworth and Scott and Lamb, I found this entry:

> December 12th, 1822—at half-past eleven in the forenoon was born Frank Haydon, whom I pray God to make a better man than his father. God bless him! and grant him life, and virtue, and dauntless energy and health, and above all, genius!

At the bottom of the page, in small type, the editor of the volume had added a tragic footnote:

> Frank Haydon became an official at the Public Record Office. He died by his own hand, October 11th, 1887.

What a world of pathos is in those two quotations. The joyous thrill of the father at the arrival of his first-born son! The dreams of both parents for the future; their willing sacrifice of their own comfort and pleasure that this new young life might have a better start. The years of manhood. And at the end of it all, the wreck!

A friend of mine sat one day in a foreign hotel beside a man whom he recognized from newspaper photographs as one of America's great manufacturers. He introduced himself.

"You must pardon me, sir, for addressing you, but every American feels a personal pride in your success," he said. "What a satisfaction it must be to have made your name stand for quality and square dealing not only in your own country but throughout the world! Surely few men have so much reason to be congratulated."

The famous man made no reply for several minutes. Finally he turned, with a haggard look.

"Your words are very kind," he answered. "Under other circumstances I should probably feel exactly as you suggest. But what does it all amount to when your son is a fool?

It is a disheartening thing that with all our increase in knowledge we have learned so little about the reasons for success or failure in the molding of human lives. Shall we ever penetrate deeper into this most baffling of all Nature's secrets?

Shall we some day understand why it was that the son of shiftless Thomas Lincoln became the greatest American, while the son of the powerful Napoleon was of no account? Why two good parents produce a Washington, and two others, seemingly also good, a Benedict Arnold?

Surely no area of human life is more important or less explored. Who will found a laboratory to discover what parents can do for their children without doing too much?

Who will win the undying gratitude of the race by teaching us how to raise sons?

The SCRAP BOOK

A CHILD'S LAUGHTER

By Algernon Charles Swinburne

All the bells of heaven may ring,
All the birds of heaven may sing,
All the wells on earth may spring,
All the winds on earth may bring
All sweet sounds together;
Sweeter far than all things heard,
Hand of harper, tone of bird,
Sounds of woods at sundawn stirred,
Welling water's winsome word,
Wind in warm, wan weather.
One thing yet there is, that none,
Hearing ere its chime be done,
Knows not well the sweetest one
Heard of man beneath the sun,
Hoped in heaven hereafter;
Soft and strong and loud and light,
Very sound of very light,
Heard from morning's rosiest height
When the soul of all delight,
Fills a child's clear laughter.
Golden bells of welcome rolled
Never forth such note, nor told
Hours so blithe in tones so bold,
As the radiant mouth of gold
Here that rings forth heaven.
If the golden-crested wren
Were a nightingale—why, then
Something seen and heard of men
Might be half as sweet as when
Laughs a child of seven.

Hints for Motorists

If you go into second gear soon enough, you will seldom have to resort to low to make a steep hill.

If the starter on your car is not reliable, try to park on a grade. You can then start the car by letting it roll in high.

If your engine is laboring on a hill, it doesn't do any good to pull out the choke. Shift to a lower gear.

When you buy valve caps, get the kind that fit your valves. Some wheels require bent valves and some use the straight ones. There are caps to fit both.

In Memoriam

In loving memory of our little nephew, Cecil, J. McIntosh, who departed this life Dec. 5, 1928.

When we reach the heavenly garden
And see him in perfect bloom,
The flowers we loved so dearly
And thought that he plucked too soon,
Oh, then we shall know his reasons,
Tho' we know it not to-day,
Why in his fragrant beauty
He took our flower away.

In Memoriam

In loving memory of Cecil J. McIntosh who died December 5th 1928, age 3 years.

Our thoughts brings back to us this day
Of one who passed so suddenly away.
No one knows how we miss our darling Cecil dear,
We miss his face, we miss his smile,
For he never departed from us a while.
He was with us always far and near.
He filled our hearts with joy and cheer,
We never saw him angry or sad,
He always was a dear young lad.
He always was happy and well content,
And everything he always lent.
Some people, when they see us smile,
May think we have forgotten him all this while,
But in our hearts we all know best
Of our darling Cecil, who is now laid at rest. The only child.

Improvement came with the first few doses, and in six months the kidney trouble, weakness and headaches were gone."
"Fruit-a-tives" regulates the bowels, kidneys and skin—purifies the blood—and brings sound, vigourous health. Try this wonderful medicine made of fruit juices combined with the finest medicinal ingredients. 25c. and 50c. a box—at dealers everywhere.

Last week Cobden's C. P. R. agent received a letter from a traveller who had been there a few days previously, asking him to have a look around the baggage room for a diamond ring which he had lost. Search of the baggage room proved of no avail and thinking it had been swept up and thrown out with ashes, the ash pile was the next place to search. Seeing a small piece of tissue paper fluttering on the pile, Mr. Warren picked it up and the ring fell out. The ring was a very valuable one and the owner was most grateful for its safe return.

The United Church

(Contributed)

Rev. J. A. Waddell on Sunday spoke from Psalm 37:4 on "The Task before the Church" He referred to the deeply impressive message brought to the Official Board on the Friday night previous by Rev. Dr. Geo. A. McIntosh of Montreal, and endeavored to pass on a part of the message. The challenge of the early church was "Give me the hardest thing to be done." There never was a more favorable opportunity than now for the facing of the church's supreme mission. The life of the church depends upon the promptness with which she responds to this task. An open world is before us. The United Church has assumed larger responsibility in foreign mission than all the other Churches. At our own door we are faced with tremendous possibilities. He spoke of the Peace River District with new settlers pouring in. We are called to be partners in this work by giving of our means. At the evening service Major Adams, Principal of our High School, gave an interesting talk on Mission Work in Canada. He dwelt upon co-operation between the home and the church, as he dealt with a variety of missionary work. He spoke of teaching a class in Sunday School and getting people interested in going to church as phases of missionary work. The choir rendered appropriate selections at both services.

The Presbyterian Church

(contributed)

Rev. Mr. Turner swoke last Sunday morning on the 23rd Psalm. In the literature of the world there is nothing finer than the 23rd Psalm. No christian can read this Psalm without remembering that Jesus said "I am the Good Shepherd." Augustine chose it as the Psalm of the Martyrs. Man was made for God and man's home is with God. Goodness and mercy has blessed us in the past and will bless us in the future. Anthems sang by the choir were, "O God we worship Thee" and "Sing unto God" the solo part being taken by Miss Helen Smith.

At the evening service Mr. Turner spoke on "The Gain of Godliness" Godliness is profitable in all things. Seek ye first the kingdom of God and all other things shall be added unto you. He who offers God second place offers him no place at all. Godliness is profitable unto all things having the life that now is and the life that is to come.

C. O. V. J. Hockey League

At a meeting of the Central Ottawa Valley Junior Hockey League held Thursday Nov. 28th, at Chesterville, representatives from Winchester, Finch, Morewood and Chesterville junior clubs were present to make arrangements for the current season. Correspondence was read from the district secretary relative to the suspension of the Morewood Club from participation in the league. A ballot taken to decide the matter resulted in a tie, the casting vote being in favor of continuing the suspension. The Morewood representatives retired from the meeting and the following elections took place:

Hon. President—Eric Casselman, Chesterville; president, Carl Rice, Winchester; secretary treasurer, Leonard Porteous, Winchester; first vice-president, E. Norton, Finch; second vice president, P. S. Boyd, Chesterville. Provision was made for the admission of other clubs if a satisfactory arrangement could be made with the league. Following a discussion as to dates of games playoffs, rererees, etc., the meeting adjourned.

A little more kindness,
A little less creed,
A little more giving,
A little less greed.

A little more smile,
A little less frown,
A little less kicking
A man when he's down.

A little more "we"
A little less "I,"
A little more laugh
A little less cry.

A little more flowers.
On the pathway of life,
And fewer on graves
At the end of the strife.

If I knew you and you knew me,
'Tis seldom we would disagree;
But never having yet clasped hands,
Both often fail to understand.
That each intends to do what's right
And treat each other "honor bright"
How little to complain there'd be,
If I knew you and you knew me.
