Jay Salmon, 68, Passes Suddenly at his Home

A very wide circle of friends and acquaintances in Morrisburg and throughout the area learned with regret of the sudden death of Jay Salmon on Tuesday, October 13th. Mr. Salmon died suddenly at his home on Fifth Street in his 69th year.

Jay Sterling Salmon was a son of the late Willis and Carrie Salmon. He was born at Avonmore on August 9th, 1902, and although the greater part of his life was spent in the Morrisburg area, he had resided also at Avonmore, Latchford, New Liskeard and Elk Lake..

For twenty-eight years he was a patrolman for the Ontario Department of Highways, retiring in 1966. He took pride in his work and in the condition of the highways in his patrol area, particularly during the winter months. Since his retirement, he had done some gardening during the summers and was justifiably famous for the high-quality sweet corn he raised for eager customers.

He is survived by his wife, the former Bessie Lilian Merkley, of Morrisburg, whom he married at Waddington, N.Y., August 15, 1931. Also surviving are four sons: Willis of Morrisburg; Roger of Chesterville; Percy of Morrisburg; Wayne of Gallingertown; two daughters: Mrs. Roland Boyer (Ellen), Allentown, Pa.; Mrs. Foster Hanson, (Kay), of North Bay; one brother, Mark P. Salmon of Prescott; and two sisters: Mrs. D. Banton (Jean) of Ottawa and Mrs. E. B. Kingston (Audrey) of Prescott.

He had received Quarter Century Club recognition from the Department of Highways for more than 25 years of service.

Funeral service was held Thursday, October 15th at St. Paul's Lutheran Church, Morrisburg, of which he was a member, with Rev. F. L. Howald in charge. Interment followed at Mount Pleasant cemetery, Morrisburg.

The Shape of Things to Come

Prior to Tuesday's election in the Province of Nova Scotia, the so-called experts had been predicting a return to power by the Conservative government of Premier G. I. Smith. In the last election. held in 1967, the PCs won 40 seats, the Liberals six and the NDP were unrepresented in the Legislature.

But the voters in Nova Scotia, as in other parts of the world, sometimes confound the experts and the pollsters, and when Wednesday morning rolled around, the Liberals had won 22 seats and were leading in one; the NDPs had gained two seats while the once-invincible Tories had been reduced to 20 seats. Prior to this election the PCs had held power for fourteen years.

Federal Conservative Leader Robert Stanfield expressed surprise and disappointment when told of the election result. Mr. Stanfield was formerly the party leader in Nova Scotia. But the vote in the Atlantic Province could be a prelude to things to come. Ontario's Premier Robarts, who is expected to go the electorate in 1971, is busily mending political fences in an effort to avoid the same fate which inevitably awaits governments too long entrenched in office. Faced with a determined bid by the official opposition liberals, and a newly resurgent NDP party with a brand new and dynamic leader, Mr. Robarts recently announced tax assistance programs for farmers — who had flatly refused to pay the new and higher school taxes. More and more, the premier is finding some of the plans of the bright young men in his cabinet for new and more sophisticated, (and much, much more expensive), forms of education and municipal government, to be a millstone around his neck.

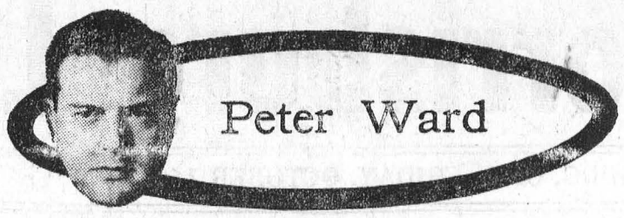
Steno's Job is to Marry the Boss

Bosses of stenographers everywhere should be on their toes. The boss who is intent on preserving his bachelorhood may find his task more difficult, warns the editor of Office Equipment & Methods, business publication. He reports that a secretarial school in London, England, has as its stated objective the goal of producing a special breed of secretary: "Each of my girls should marry her boss", explains the director. To prepare for this role in life, students receive instruction in etiquette, flower arranging, dancing, interior decorating, design, art appreciation, gourmet cooking, selection of antique furniture. Spare time, if any, is spent on learning the rudiments of typing and dictation.

Letters Must Be Signed

At this time of year, with municipal election time approaching, we, and other editors get letters signed with names like "Irate Taxpayer", "Fair Play" and other such pseudonyms, from people who want to snipe from ambush at those elected to conduct the affairs of the community. Some newspapers will publish these letters, providing the writer's real name and address is attached. The Morrisburg Leader will not! If you wish to publicly air a complaint against anyone, we welcome letters to the editor, but they must be signed, and your signature will be used at the foot of such letters.

These letters can be of tremendous value, not only to the voting public, but also to those elected representatives who are willing to accept and to profit from such criticism. But we have never figured why someone with an honest criticism of any governing body should want to hide his identity behind the editor of a newspaper.



A 'flea-bite' gas flap

OTTAWA — Energy Minister J. J. Greene wound up the summer recess of Parliament by announcing the largest single sale of Canadian natural gas to the U.S.

He made the announcement less than a week before Parliament resumed sitting, and took a certain amount of flack for his timing from the Opposition.

The sale was okayed by the National Energy Board and Cabinet after nine months of complex hearings, and a document of evidence, heavy enough to outweigh a small boy, was presented to the press with the decision.

"Sellout," cried New Democrat leader Tommy Douglas. "The country boys have been taken to the cleaners by the sharp Yankee traders."

Mr. Douglas may have been right, but his terminology was the same as that he's used times without number. To our shame, members of the Press Gallery picked up the quotes faithfully (me included — and I compound the sin here) but because of the rhetoric, the tone of the Douglas reaction stories was not sincere.

Personally, I'm not sure whether or not Canada is doing the right thing by agreeing to sell $2 billion worth of natural gas to the U.S. over the next 20 years. The export volume announced in late September, incidentally, brings the total amount of export credit earned through Canadian natural gas entering the U.S. to more than $6 billion between now and 1990.

Mr. Greene and his experts produced charts and figures to show us that the amount of natural gas committed to the U.S. was a flea-bite when compared to what we had in Canadian reserves. The NEB, he assured the nation, had projected domestic gas needs into the future and kept more than enough for Canada.

● When we asked about militant statements from him earlier in the year proposing to win free access to U.S. markets for Canadian oil and for Canadian-manufactured goods from the petrochemical industry, Mr. Greene turned us off.

"You can't bargain apples for oranges," he said.

Why not I'd like to know.

The giant gas deal seems predicated on the hope that the U.S. will recognize Canadians as honest merchants and reward such open-heartedness with favors like the dropping of oil import quotas and lower tariff barriers for our manufactured goods.

Perhaps the tactic will work, but I wouldn't bet my last biscuit on it — unless there's an under-the-counter deal with Washington, which Mr. Greene swears there isn't.

I can't see any validity in the NDP argument that Canada will need all that gas — there does indeed seem to be a surplus to sell — but it seems a shame to throw away a valuable bargaining tool. The U.S. needs natural gas badly, and although we only supply 1 per cent of her needs, we supply it to the fuel-hungry northern sector of the States. It's pretty important.

Discussing the ramifications of the gas deal a few days later in Parliament's fifth-floor cafeteria, Max Saltsman, the NDP's financial critic from Waterloo, Ont., came up with an argument against the gas sale that made more sense than the official line of his party.

"What are we getting?" he demanded. "We're getting $2 billion over 20 years and 13,000 man-year jobs to build pipelines.

"We've already got a favorable balance of trade with the U.S. — that's what's pushed the Canadian dollar so high — and this will make the balance even more in our favor.

"The U.S. is going to demand even more imports into Canada of manufactured goods to win back some of that trade imbalance, and those imported U.S. manufactured goods will replace Canadian-made stuff."

Max claimed that wholesale resource sales were increasingly making us dependent on low employment resources sales to the U.S. — locking Canada into an inflationary unemployment cycle.

I don't pretend to be economist enough to judge the validity of the argument, but it sure sounded good. If Canada's ever going to match the U.S. in industrial capacity, we're going to have to start winning tariff agreements which allow us to specialize, with access for our specialities to the giant U.S. market.

That's the sort of bargaining that should be going on with the U.S. Let's shoot for what's fair in Canadian eyes; not leave the judgment up to Washington.

MURDERS SUGGEST DEATH PENALTY REVIEW BY CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

(The Glengarry News)

The shocking murder of a 16-year-old baby-sitter at Hamilton, the daughter of Glengarrians, is a grim reminder that murder is occurring more frequently in Canada than it ever did before. A brutal, senseless murder it apparently was, but this type of mayhem without motive is on the increase, perhaps a product of wider drug addiction.

The influence of drugs may account for some of these slayings and the trend to disrespect for law and crime in the streets could also be a factor. Abolition of the death penalty for murder by the federal government in 1967 probably is the trigger that has shot the rate to nearly one a day in Canada.

In 1966 there were 220 victims: last year there were 342. And, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistiis, attempted murders were more numerous, too.

Commissioner W. Leonard Higgitt of the RCMP has expressed the view that the partial abolition of the death penalty gives "grave cause for concern" because of the climb of the murder rate.

In December, 1967, Parliament decided to introduce what is known as the non-capital murder charge for a five-year trial period. Only persons convicted of killing police officers and prison guards while in the performance of their duties put their lives in jeopardy.

But, so far, even these killers have had their sentences commuted.

Eldon Woolliams, a sharp-tangued Conservative MP from Calgary North, calls the capital punishment law, "a farce". Recalling a remark by Justice Minister John Turner that the courts should "get tough" with criminals, Mr. Woolliams commented: "So what does he do? He sits in cabinet and agrees to commute the sentences of murderers who have killed police. How can our police do the job expected of them when the Government won't back them up and enforce the law of the land?"

The Canadian Association of Police Chiefs felt the same way, it was disclosed, during its conference in September. It urged the Government to review the policy of abolition, pointing to the alarming rise in the murder rate.

Many members of Parliament are reluctant to take sides in the matter. In 1967, when the prime minister of the day, Lester B. Pearson, had taken an unequivocal sand against capital punishment, 114 members voted to accept the restricted death penalty and 87 voted against it. Only 20 months before, in a "free" vote, influenced by no party policy a private bill to outlaw the gallows was defeated 143 to 112.

So, with the Commons as a criterion, it is obvious there is a sharp division of opinion as to whether hanging should be retained as a deterrent or not. The weight of argument at this time would seem to be for retention.

Hanging, or any other form of execution, is repugnant to Canadians. But so is murder.

Certainly when such a crime occurs there should be no sentimental nonsense about restoring a prisoner's freedom. Too often it has been the experience of this society that a man who has killed and who is given another chance will kill again.

Parliament almost certainly will be asked in the near future to review this ugly problem. It is the duty of the electorate to do a little soul-searching and advise their representatives faced with the responsibility of what is literally a life-or-death decision.

Chances of Pregnancy

Dear Miss Brookfield:

I am 46. It has been over two years since I had a period. Can I still conceive? I don't want to take any chances on getting pregnant so please answer as soon as possible A.B.

Dear A.B.:

We don't want to take any chances either, so we suggest you visit your doctor for an answer to your question. Generally, medical authorities agree that a woman who has not menstruated for a year is a menopausal and unable to conceive These authorities also recommend annual checkups as a form of preventive medicine. So visit your doctor and discuss your question with him.

Friendless Widow

Dear Miss Brookfield:

I am a widow of 57 who needs some suggestions to help me pick up and go on. Despite all I do—praying, sewing, shopping and calling friends — I get more depressed and withdrawn with each passing day. No one wants to "be involved" and we are advised not to bother our children. I work but my salary is low and I am forced to pinch to get by. If I had more money I could probably attract more friends. Can you advise me? R.S.

Dear R.S.:

They say you "can't buy friends". But as one comic used to say, "I've been rich and I've been poor. But rich is better." Other than personal initiative, we have no suggestions for increasing your income However, as your pursuits seem to be solitary ones, why not involve yourself in more social activities, either through your church affiliation or community organizations? In addition, we would certainly advise you to discuss your symptoms of depression and withdrawal with your doctor. Perhaps he can help relieve them.

Answer to Divorcee

Dear Miss Brookfield:

Would you advise M.F., the lonely divorcee from Fort Wayne, Indiana who complained about the eligible men she meets, that there are many fine divorced men just looking for the right girl. I am 42. If I lived closer, I would look her up myself. B.R.

Dear B.R.:

Want to bet we get a pile of letters from lonely Delaware women, where distance is no excuse? We might as well advise them right now that we cannot forward their letters to B.R.

Problems at 20

Dear Miss Brookfield:

I am 20 years old, five-foot-six and weight 110 lbs. I would like you to help me get some dates or else some boys to write to. S.A.

Dear S.A.:

We wish we could but we can't. Are there no family members who can introduce you to boys? If they can't help, are there no co-educational community organizations you can join for this purpose?

Meeting at Potsdam of Interest To All in St. Lawrence Valley

Mr. Joseph A. Romola, President of the Black River-St. Lawrence Economic Development Commission and Mr. John W. Winthrop, President of the St. Lawrence County Chamber of Commerce announce the joint sponsorship of a public information meeting on "The Status and Prospects for the Location of the National Breeder Reactor Demonstration Project in New York State." The meeting will be held at 7:00 p.m., Thursday, October 15 at Snel Hall Auditorium at Clarkson College of Technology, Potsdam, New York.

Hosts for the meeting will be the Associated Colleges of the St. Lawrence Valley.

The information meeting will feature two speakers: Dr. Clifford K. Beck, Deputy Director of Regulation for the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission and Mr. James G. Cline, Chairman of the New York State Atomic and Space Development Authority. The purpose of the meeting is to provide factual and accurate description, in simple terms, of the development of nuclear power reactors and the national importance of the breeder reactor to the meeting of future energy requirements while fulfilling our environmental protection objective. The speakers will also discuss this technology and the contemplated projects and present facts on how such a project would be undertaken and the effects that will be mounted on the state and federal level to assure that the demonstration project is undertaken with the utmost careful consideration of the public interest. Other considerations such as this important contribution which these pioneering projects can bring to the neighboring community will be discussed. The public is invited to ask questions with respect to any aspect of the project. A great deal of interest has been shown by the public and the press on this project, particularly since the State Atomic Authority and the state's seven private utilities are considering our area as a possible site for a demonstration Breeder Nuclear Power Station.

"It must be membered that the St. Lawrence site is only one of several which are being considered, cautions Mr. Cline. Any decision to even commence construction is years away and will occur only after completion of elaborate evaluation by the state and federal governments, and licensing proceedings including public hearings in this selected local community. Thus these presentations will not "argue" for the location of the proposed plant in this area, but will give residents a realistic and factual "feel" for such a project so as to form an informed opinion as to how the project relates to and might augment the community's long-term objectives. The sponsors of the information session feel there is a need to clear the air through the presentation of an accurate report of the national program and also to assure that the projects consideration is not clouded by misconceptions and misinformation.

The sponsors are eager to work with all segments of the community in assuring that authoritative, complete information is widely available to all the people and call upon all responsible, concerned citizens to participate in this comprehensive public information program.

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

The phrase "how's the market?" has become a household expression among Canadian investors.

In the face of changing market conditions, Canada Savings Bonds represent a stable method of investing and saving to several million individuals across the country.

A large segment of these people buy their Canada Savings Bonds each year through the Payroll Savings Plan at their place of work. Since the money is automatically deducted from a person's wages or salary before he receives it, the temptation to forego the usual regular savings deposit is eliminated.

Experience has proven that a definite savings plan brings more positive results than good intentions. A case in point; an executive going "broke" on $25,000 a year discovered that not only could his family not live on his salary, but he was going into debt at an average rate of $2,000 annually.

The root of the problem lay in the haphazard manner in which he was approaching his debts and attempts at saving.

Another case in joint: a young draftsman who is supporting his wife on $4,900 a year; who by living modestly managed to save $400 last year through the Canada Savings Bonds Payroll Savings Plan. Not only is he living within his means, but he is planning for the future.

Doris Clark

Dog-sitter at 51

DEAR DORIS — I was against getting a dog, but our 12-year-old daughter never let up until we finally got her one.

After we had him two months I talked with her and we agreed to give him away, and then she missed him and her father got him back.

Doris, I am 51. I have raised four children and now I want to be free to go out once in a while. I don't want the extra work that a dog involves.

In A Quandary

DEAR QUANDARY — With every joy comes a responsibility.

Talk with her again. Put on her shoulders the tasks involved in caring for him: feeding, bathing, walking him, making him behave. If she decides she wants him on these terms, I'd suggest you try it.

It is a fallacy that someone must stay home to dog-sit. An adult dog can be left alone for up to eight hours, confined in basement or kitchen, with food and water and a few toys to chew on.

There are books and clubs for dog owners and a great joy in the owning of one if it is done right.

DEAR DORIS — I am a boy 16 and in grade 12. Most people in my classes last year were aged 17 or 18.

They seemed to think I was childish because I openly displayed my enthusiasm over things, while they tried to hide theirs. I think it is supposed to make them appear "cool" or something.

I have to associate with them all day, and this is beginning to get on my nerves. I think that I, rather than all of them, should change to fit in. Do you have any ideas as to how I can take a quickie "maturity course"?

Giddy Teenybopper

DEAR GIDDY — Awkward, isn't it? One of the penalties of being smart! You aren't the first person to find himself out of his depth.

Overnight polish is not the answer. Let them tease you if they like; be your natural self, since enthusiasm is the winner in the long run.

Things might just take an interesting twist if you found yourself some chums your own age. They'd be proud to claim a modest "brain" in their crowd.

DEAR DORIS — I am 16 and have gone out with a certain 17-year-old boy, three times so far, and really enjoy myself with him. His sister, one of my close friends, asked me what we did on our last date, and I told her.

Well, the other day she said something that "just slipped out", and he took it wrongly and got all upset. He said: "Does she tell you everything?" To which she answered, "No!" And he said, "I bet you ask her!"

I feel terrible. I can just imagine what he must think of me. I deeply regret telling her anything, and now I could cry. He has obviously jumped to conclusions — but what can I do about it?

Desperate

DEAR DESPERATE — What you told must have been of the "classified" variety; couldn't have been about whether it rained, or you saw a picture or went dancing.

Did you reveal about him something you wouldn't want him to tell about you? Boys learn whether they can trust their girls or not. If this one episode teaches you not to betray confidence, it will have been worth it.

But you can apologize. And since he likes you, it is quite possible he will forgive and forget.

DEAR DORIS — (1) Are blue or different colors of stationery wrong to use when you're writing business letters?

(2) Is colored paper wrong for friendly letters?

(3) Is stationery with cute little verses wrong to use?

Unsure

DEAR UNSURE — (1) Yes. (2) No. (3) No.

Confidential to Needing Him — Sorry, Sweetie, but it isn't always possible to get that wandering boy back. Funny thing is, often when a girl like you does find him back on the doorstep, as often as not she wishes he wasn't!

You see, we change. Do you want the same storybooks that entranced you in Grade 1? If our ideas stayed the same, there'd really be cause for alarm. Same with our friends.

Next month this time, or maybe next week, you'll be laughing at today's desperation. Look around for new worlds to conquer.

Local People to Attend Convention

The handling of drug patients, electronic hazards in hospitals, the regionalization of health services and the problems of pollution are typical of the wide range of topics due for examination at the forty-sixth annual convention of the Ontario Hospital Association at Toronto's Royal York Hotel, October 26, 27, 28. Among the many thousands of delegates who will be attending from all parts of Ontario, will be a representative group from the Winchester District Memorial Hospital. They will include Mr. S. A. Hicks, Chairman of the Board, Mr. J.C. Hatcher, Treasurer, Mr. H.P. Stel, Administrator, Mr. J. O'Gorman, Business Manager, Miss B Legris, Director of Nursing, Mr. A.R. Larocque, Purchasing Agent and Mr. D. Levere, Chief Engineer.

While hospital trustees and administrators concentrate attention at the daily general sessions on matters affecting hospital management, numerous other meetings will be running simultaneously for specialized health personnel who belong to the 20 affiliated sections of the hospital association. These OHA sections range from nursing administration, lab technologists and pharmacists to engineers, housekeepers, accountants and the two newest groups — directors of volunteer services and hospital chaplains. Both these new sections have invited top name speakers to address their meetings. Dr. Reva Gerstein, the well-known Toronto psychologist and chairman of Project '70, will be taking to the directors of volunteer services on the subject of "Serving Humanity 1970 Style". The chaplains, who represent all religious faiths ministering in hospitals, will have Dr. Robert McClure, the forthright Moderator of the United Church of Canada, as their leadoff speaker. The Hospital Auxiliaries Association of Ontario which, with more than 60-000 members, is by far the largest OHA Section, will be holding its own annual conference in conjunction with the OHA meetings. The Winchester District Memorial Hospital Auxiliary will be represented by Mrs. Max Boyd and Mrs. John Campbell.

The OHA, which is a voluntary organization representing all the public hospitals in Ontario, plus many related health institutions, is also making a particultr effort to encourage closer understanding between physicians and community hospitals. There will be a joint session for hospital trustees and medical staff at which a group of leading Canadian medical educators will discuss how the local physician can keep abreast of advances in medical knowledge to serve his patients better. Altogether more than 70 speakers and panelists will participate in the three-day convention, which also feautres an exhibition of modern hospital equipment by more than 150 suppliers and manufactueres.

Presiding over the whole affair will be Mr. Charles I. Black, of Rodney, who will be completing his one-year term as OHA President.

The President-Elect is Dr. Hugo T. Ewart of Hamilton, Consultant Administrator to the Hamilton Health Association and a former President of the Ontario Medical Association.

RATES GOING UP FOR RURAL HYDRO CUSTOMERS

An increase in rates for nearly 600,000 rural customers was announced today by Ontario Hydro. Effective on bills payable January 1, 1971, the rate change will raise revenue from Hydro's rural customers by 9 per cent.

It is the second general rate increase in 17 years. The last one was effective October, 1968. Specific percentage rate increases to customers vary according to service classification. Details are being mailed directly to all customers.

Hydro Chairman George Gathercole said that the increase is "regrettable, but unavoidable. Owing to inflationary pressures and rising costs, our rural system is now operating at a substantial loss.

"Costs have been esclating for equipment and supplies, salaries and wages, and interest on capital funds. Methods to control air pollution have become an increasingly significant budget consideration. Heavy expenses have been incurred for the installation of pollution abatement equipment and pur chases of low-sulphur fuel," he said.

'Thumbtacks' with a Punch

Defeat is only a temporary stop on the way to victory in the eyes of Imlach.

He will have to get accustomed to making a number of temporary stops this hockey season. His Buffalo Sabres, one of the two new expansion teams, aren't expected to beat many teams.

"We'll make the playoffs, don't worry about that" Imlach boasted with a straight face at the conclusion of his Peterborough, Ont., training camp.

He then proceeded to drop the usual cliches of the coaching fraternity: "We'll play them one at a time;" or "Defeat does not rest easily on my shoulders;" or "The team that won't be beaten, can't be beaten."

Those who know Punch realize that his optimism is part of his con job. He insisted to Toronto hockey writers in 1959 that the Leafs would make the playoffs now that he was coach. Everyone laughed, but ol' Punch kept telling the Leafs the story and apparently they believed it. New York and Detroit also became believers — and conveniently folded in the stretch to send Imlach on his way as a successful National Hockey League coach.

Since that time, he's compiled an impressive record and formulated a number of opinions.

The lawyers and agents of the young hockey players are finding that out.

"Any time a guy tells me he's speaking for a player, I ask him who intends to play hockey, the lawyer or the player. If I'm going to have a kid playing for me, then he's going to have to make his deal with me," Punch ruled years ago.

"I simply refuse to talk contract with lawyers and agents," Punch explained. "I'm all for the players hiring tax consultants and lawyers to advise them on financial matters. But I'm not signing a lawyer to a contract. The player has to come to me in the final analysis. That's the way it is and that's the way it's going to stay."

Punch insists that he would follow the same path if the player in question was a Bobby Orr and the parents insisted on a lawyer handling all contract talks.

Fortunately for Imlach, this year the new Orr of the NHL, Gilbert Perreault of Victoriaville, Que., didn't sign on with a lawyer before seeing the Buffalo management. Instead, he was represented by his brother-in-law.

"That's different . . . the kid doesn't speak enough English to handle a contract," Punch insisted, in defending the apparent bending of his own rule. "It was just the same as dealing with the player; he was on hand most of the time."

Had Perreault insisted on a lawyer to handle negotiations, Imlach infers that there would have been a clash. It's doubtful if even Punch could have held firm — the Sabres need Perreault on the ice as well as for the gate.

"But I'll tell you this," he smiled. "Perreault signed with me and got more money than if a lawyer had been negotiating for him."

It's good to have Imlach back in hockey after a year's forced leave of absence. He can hardly wait for his first visit to Maple Leaf Gardens.

After all, he's told his players that the Leafs are one team the Sabres will knock off to make the playoffs. Now, if only they have the faith of the 1959 Leafs and . . .

CBC Radio is offering a $1000 prize for an original documentary essay on audio tape. One purpose of the competition, aside from discovering people with a talent for making radio programs, is to encourage the use of existing oral history material and to develop new sources. Entries will be judged on content, intrinsic interest, presentation and technical quality, and any tape submitted will be considered for broadcast on the CBC-FM program Ideas, and on CBC Tuesday Night. Deadline for entry in the CBC Oral History Project is April 10, 1971. Further information may be obtained by writing to Oral History Project, Lewis Auerbach, CBC, Box 500, Terminal A, Toronto 1.

Indian Magazine has a new name As of October 10 it will be known as Our Native Land, because it reflects the activities and interests of all Canada's native peoples, not just the Indian. Host-producer is Johnny Yesno, an Obijway from northern Ontario, and his production assistants are Elizabeth Samson, a Cree from Southern Alberta, and Robert Arsman, a Chippewa.

In 1170, Thomas a Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury, was murdered on the steps of his cathedral by agents of King Henry II, for resisting the king's attempts to get the church under his complete control. 1970 is the 800th anniversary of Becket's martyrdom.—Montreal producer Earl Pennington leaves shortly for England to do research and collect interviews for a program he is doing on Becket which will be aired on CBC Tuesday Night, December 29. Pennington will be accompanied by writer David Lindsor and William Bothwell, former dean of the Anglican cathedral in Montreal.

British novellist Muriel Spark is probably best-known for her novel, The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie, which was made into a stage play and later a hit movie. Her first play was Doctors of Philosophy,—produced in London in 1962. It's about a family of Ph.D's and the emotional needs of its highly intelligent women. The dialogue is both amusing and scintillating; Nathan Cohen considers Mrs. Spark the best comedy writer since Evelyn Waugh. Doctors of Philosophy is Cohen's Choice for October 20.

Beginning October 21 for three weeks, Ideas Network has a series called Cycles, on the cycle of birth, growth, decline and death, and recurring cycles as in history, regeneration, even reincarnation. It is taken from the longer series on CBC-FM's IDEAS, which touches on cycles in nature, science, history, economics, politics, philosophy and literature, and features such outstanding thinkers as Buckminster Fuller, Alan Watts and Margaret Mead.

Concerned about the cost of prescriptions?

...your Ontario Government is... and is doing something about it.

Everyone concerned about the cost of prescriptions finds the whole thing quite mystifying.

Drug manufacturers' prices vary. Pharmacies' dispensing fees vary. Doctors prescribe, but don't always know about prices. The result is that you, the patient, have no way of knowing if your drug bill is reasonable or not.

Now the mysticism is being removed.

For many months the Ontario Department of Health has been working on a program that will help everybody in Ontario to obtain prescriptions at reasonable cost... "PARCOST".

The key is a book that has been supplied for the professional use of every physician, dentist, hospital and pharmacist in the province. Titled the Comparative Drug Index, it lists many of the high quality drugs now available. And it tells how much each one costs.

For the first time, this revealing information has been assembled in one book, compiled by an authoritative group of doctors and experts who have evaluated, without bias, quality products from over 60 different companies. And it makes possible, quick easy cost comparisons of drugs that meet highest quality standards, enabling your doctor and your pharmacist to take active parts in the PARCOST program.

Also, your Ontario Government has obtained the co-operation of participating pharmacists in agreeing to standardized pricing methods.

Everyone can help make the PARCOST program work. Discuss it with your doctor or pharmacist. And when you have a prescription to be filled, look for the PARCOST symbol at the drug store. Displayed on the door or window, it tells you that the pharmacist is co-operating to help you obtain prescriptions at reasonable cost.

Drivers and Deterrents

(The Smiths Falls Record-News)

In the battle against the impaired driver there can be no doubt that, whatever its faults, Canada's breathalizer legislation is of significant value as a deterrent. There are other penalties, however, which can be just as costly to the motorist convicted of impaired driving.

Many drivers do not realize it, but liability policies have a clause prohibiting use of the vehicle while the driver is impaired by drugs or alcohol. Even though he carries full insurance a car owner may become personally liable for damages awarded as a result of an accident while the driver was intoxicated. If more people thought about this fact seriously, we are certain there would be fewer drivers entering their cars after "a few drinks".

One of the basic difficulties in grappling with the problem of traffic offenders, we suspect, is the myth that driving permits are a right. A licence to drive is no such thing; it is a privilege granted to those who are, or should be, responsible enough to assume control of a vehicle on the oads and highways and to have due respect for the lives and safety of others.

There are many motorists abroad today whose driving records are appalling. We believe that if more of these chronic offenders were to be denied the privilege of ever legally driving agai nthere would be fewer repeaters in the courts, fewer accidents on the roads. It would be a powerful deterrent. But how hesitant the courts seem to revoke that privilege, or when they do, how prone to impose the minimum licence suspension.

The Woodlands Improvement Act permits the Department of Lands and Forests to enter into 15 year agreements with private landowners. Seedlings are provided by the Department to the owner at a cost of $10.00 per thousand. They are planted free of charge by the Department.

If you have marginal or sub - marginal farmland and an interest in reforestation, you may obtain further information and a free inspection of your property by contacting your nearest office of the Department of Lands and Forests.

DISTRICT WATERFOWL HUNTING on opening day, Sept, 26, 1970

by: Bruce Turner

Wildlife Management Officer

Duck hunters throughout the district enjoyed a successful hunt on opening day, with perfect weather and an abundance of water fowl.

In comparing the past four years, 1967-1970, the average bag in birds per hunter was 1.1, 0.9, 1.4 and 1.1 respectively.

The ducks in general were in good condition with the adult birds in almost full plumage, while the juveniles have passed the pin feather stage and have reached full growth.

The inclement weather that has saturated the district for the past two months has created two main effects on hunting. First, it has given the hunters many more beaver ponds to hunt that normally would be dry at this time of year. Also, when the pressure on the ducks became too heavy they were able to set down on smaller ponds where there were no hunters.

The Kemptville Detachment reported checking 275 hunters for a kill of 346 ducks, averaging 4.1 hours of hunting per bird.

In Alexandria 298 hunters were checked for 399 ducks averaging 1.6 hours per duck.

One hundred and seventy-four hunters were checked for a kill of 79 birds averaging 5.0 hours of hunting per bird. by Lanark Detachment.

In order of abundance in the kill were:

Teal 45.02%; Mallard 19.93%; Black 17.48%; Wood Duck 13.11%; Ballpate 0.97%; Pintail 0.61%; Shoveller, 0.12%; Ringneck 2.06%; Mergansers 0.24%; Scaup 1.46%.

There were not many geese flying on opening day, but two Canada geese were shot.

Isn't this just ducky

Sometimes when a man gets an apprehensive feeling, it is a good idea to listen. It was that way about six p.m. on the day the duck season opened.

A storm began, with thunder and lightning. Big claps. Big flashes. We were standing on small wooden skids set on fallen trees in this swamp. I was about 50 yards from one of my friends, and three others were scattered 100 yards or so away in other hides.

Bob, the nearest one, is a big man. He was an army sergeant and now he sells cars. On both counts he doesn't scare easily. "I think maybe we'd better get out of here," he called over to me.

"Aw, I don't know," I called back. "The ducks'll just be coming."

Because of the storm, it was much darker than usual in the swamp — and I was right, the ducks soon came, and Bob and I were knocking them down at a good rate.

But then one of my other friends, Dave, came paddling along in a canoe. He was an air force navigator, and spent three years in a German prison camp. He doesn't scare easily either.

"Jay and I and Doug have been talking," he rumbled. "Decided it's just not a good idea to be sticking steel barrels like lightning rods up into this storm."

"I guess you're right," I said. By then I had my limit, so it wasn't exactly a case of a change of heart. Also, the rain was coming down harder. I knew where we had dropped our ducks, so Dave got into my hide and I started out to find them. Sometimes I had to get out and stand in my waders on fallen trees or brush and pull the canoe across. Eventually I went in up to my waist, but I picked up the ducks, and what's a bootful of water between friends?

By then, the ducks were really piling in for the night: big mallards and blacks by the dozens, dropping down in the rain. We were all soaked as we loaded the canoe and our other gear to the 1958 Chev panel truck standing in a stubble field behind trees at one edge of the swamp.

The field was soft anyway from previous rains. When we were ready to go, the mud tires at the back just dug deep and the truck wouldn't move. We tried shoving it and rocking it. All we did was dig up the field.

After trying for half an hour, we knew we weren't getting out. The night now was impenetrably black. "Let's take our guns and leave everything else," Jay called through the rain. He owns the truck, and also is a friend of the farmer on whose land we were shooting. "If we can't get him to pull us out with his tractor, we'll just have to phone one of the women to come and get us." That would be a round trip of 80 miles.

"I'll carry the ducks, too," I said. I knew our wives had wax all heated in the garage at home, where traditionally on opening night we pluck and clean the ducks in preparation for a grand duck dinner the following day. I didn't want to miss that.

We had started away from the truck when we heard a very welcome sound: a tractor starting up at the farmhouse a few hundred yards away. Ken, the farmer, covered from head to foot in oilskins, arrived on the tractor a few minutes later.

"I said to the wife, I'll bet those fellows are stuck," he said. So he had come to see. He brushed off our fervent thanks. "Anybody would do the same," he said. He hauled us across three fields to the road, and then we were on our way, looking forward to the warm house and dry clothes.

Later, we plucked and cleaned 12 ducks. The next day about 15 of us sat down to dinner. We did a lot of laughing over what it had taken to put those ducks on the table. And about how much easier it would have been if we'd left when the storm began, as Bob had suggested.

POLLUTION TO BE DISCUSSED

Environmental cleanliness is everyone's concern, but of special importance to people involved in health care and food preparation. Hospital dietians will be holding a forum on pollution during their Section Meeting at the Annual Convention of the Ontario Hospital Association. The Convention will take place in Toronto, on October 26, 27 and 28, and will attract about 7,500 professionals from hospitals and hospital suppliers.

The dietitians have invited guest speakers from various branches of government concerned with pollution control, as well as the University of Toronto's Pollution Probe. The discussions will cover pesticides, air pollution and detergents.
