SERVICE, to Us IMPLIES MUCH

Among the things that characterize our service are personal attention to every detail of the funeral arrangement, and little acts of thoughtfulness that serve to lessen the trying strain of the hours before and during the funeral. Quiet efficiency and smoothness are the result. That, we believe, is the kind of service that wins approval.

HENRY'S Shorthand School Ottawa, Ont.

No School in Canada offers a better training, or ensures a more successful future. Henry's leads all others, and ranks among employers as "THE SCHOOL OF HIGHER EFFICIENCY"—a fact borne out by more than 600 pupils who have, since January, 1913, left other Ottawa schools to come to it.

Therefore, it is not surprising that business men, in advertising for stenographers, should specially say, "Graduates of Henry's School preferred."

VERY HEAVY FROST

During the first two days of this week this district experienced particularly cold weather for so early in the season. Monday and Tuesday the ground was so stiffly frozen that plowing was stopped. Several motorists who did not realize the danger found their engines and radiators damaged when the water was frozen in the cooling systems. Monday evening at dusk a real blizzard covered the ground with snow in a very few minutes.

THREE CHESTERVILLE BOYS WIN "ROYAL" TRIP

Keith Graham, Allison Graham and Harry Allison were among the ten successful contestants in the stock and seed judging competitions held at Kemptville Agricultural School last Thursday, thereby qualifying for a free trip to the Royal Show at Toronto, as guests of the Government at the latter end of this month. The competition was open to Dundas and West Stormont counties for farmer's sons under twenty-three years of age. The judging was done on hogs, sheep, horses, cows, fowl and grain. The boys are to be congratulated on their success which also reflects much credit on the methods of the home farms of Mr. Chas. Graham and Mr. Parnham Allison.

DWELLING IN CONNAUGHT DESTROYED BY FIRE

Saturday evening last about eleven o'clock the home of Mr. and Mrs. Karl Robertson of Connaught, was totally destroyed by fire together with its contents. Mr and Mrs. Robertson had been in Chesterville doing their trading in the early part of the evening, when on their way home still some distance away they noticed that their home was burning. Before it was noticed by neighbors the flames had gained such headway that practically nothing was saved. Mr. and Mrs. Robertson were left with nothing but the clothing which they wore. A small amount of insurance was carried.

Brownies, Fairies, Ghosts In Annual Reunion

The Town Hall was the scene of a merry time last night where Brownies, Hobgoblins, Witches, Ghosts, Owls Cats and Bats gathered for their annual reunion.

The Hall was decorated with pumpkins, cornstalks, black cats and bats, and as the guests entered they were received by two tall ghosts, who silently presented a box by way of suggesting a cash contribution. The costumes were varied and unique, and the judges had to work overtime to decide the prize winners.

Mrs. P. Flynn as Pierrot was a mysterious personage and entertained the company with her graceful acting.

Others worthy of special mention were Mrs. A. E. Bolster, Mrs. J. McCloskey, Mrs. G. Senn, Miss M. Merkley as Gypsies, Mrs. Angus Merkley, Old Lady, Mrs. Geo. Merkley as Topsy, Mrs. John Wardell as Milkman, and Mrs. D. Allison as Witch.

The children's costumes were original, fancy and comic and were all so good it is impossible to mention all.

The programme was enjoyed by everybody, fathers ,mothers, older boys and girls and little children all taking part in the revels. The small children were lovely in a "Goblin Dance," Lois Boyd and Yvonne Merkley reciting a verse of "Little Orphan Annie" and the rest of the group taking the part of the "Goblins."

The Girl Guides built their camp fire, around which they sat and sang melodys and rounds, an echo of their summer camp.

A group of children with Miss Anna Smith provided a comic number.

In the pie eating contest, Mr. Geo. Merkley carried off the prize, with "Bus" Hutt a close second.

Lawrence Ruck was first in the apple contest.

The other prize winners were:

Best Comic, small child, boy—Douglas Fox, Brownie.

Mountain Boy Killed In Hallowe'n Prank

Last night as the culmination of a Hallowe'en prank at Mountain Station, Thomas Harte, a lad of nineteen years, lies dead, and Lawrence Simms, sixteen years, was seriously wounded, from a gun shot alleged to have been fired by Chris. Moore, a middle aged man of that place.

A number of boys and young men bent on celebrating Hallowe'en had gathered near Moore's home in Mountain Station at which the latter became annoyed and in an endeavor to disperse the crowd from about his place is said to have fired a shot with the above serious results. He was afterwards detained at the hotel awaiting the arrival of an officer to take him in charge.

The dead boy came to Canada some years ago and has since made his home with Mr. Frank Milne about two miles south east of the village in Mountain township.

Lawrence Simms, who was wounded, is a son of Samuel Simms living in the same vicinity as Milne.

He said he knew all would desire to get back home early and he hoped, by diligent work, that the session might conclude by Thursday evening, unless something unforseen arose. If the Equalization Committee could arrange to meet at the close of the present sitting it would help to expedite business.

Dr. J. Howard Munro, of Maxville, called attention to a couple of errors in the printed report of the minutes of the June Session, and suggested these be rectified.

The Warden said the Clerk had a letter from Mr. Laurin of Morrisburg, who printed the minutes, calling attention to the errors and stating they would be corrected before the remaining copies would be issued.

Dr. Munro and Mr. Charles F. Marselis moved that the minutes of the June session be corrected and as so corrected and printed be adopted. Carried.

The Clerk read a list of thirty-seven communications received since the June session and on motion of Messrs. Bryan and Clark, these were referred to the sevral committees to which they belong for consideration and report.

Several members gave notice of their intention of introducing by-laws for various purposes during the present session of Council.

Messrs. Marselis and Schell presented a resolution of condolence on the death of Charles F. Whittaker, of Williamsburg Township, a former member of the Counties' Council. The resolution was ordered inscribed in the minutes and a copy forwarded to Mrs. Whittaker and family as an evidence of the sympathy of the members in their bereavement.

At the request of the Warden, the resolution was carried by a standing vote.

The Council then adjourned until 2 p.m. on Tuesday to allow committees to meet.

On Council resuming on Tuesday afternoon the report of the Equalization and Assessment Committee was presented by the chairman, Mr. Pollock. The report was a verification of the finding of His Honor Judge O'Reilly, some weeks ago, after the appeal of the town and township of Cornwall, as published in full in the Standard at the time. The report was adopted without amendment.

By-law No. 2261, amending By-Law No. 2260, relative to the equalization of assessment. was then passed

On motion of Messrs. Geo. D. Pollock and D. A. McIntosh, a resolution of condolence with tne family of the late Alexander B. Nugent, of the Township of Finch, a former member of Council, was then passed and ordered to be inscribed in the minutes and a copy forwarded to the family as an evidence of the regret at the passing of Mr. Nugent.

There being no further business ready for disposition, the Council adjourned until 2 p.m. on Wednesday to allow committees to meet.

The balance of the report will appear in our next issue.

Surprising Emily

"Burning one's bridges behind one" is a courageous but not aways a discreet thing to do. The old farmer whose unfortunate experience is thus chronicled will never be guilty of so radical an action again. He had been "shopping" in the village, and remembering how often his wife had reproached him for his shabby clothes, he determined to surprise her with a complete new outfit.

As the farmer drove home in the twilight an idea struck him, and halting his wagon on a bridge over a deep stream, he took off his old patched coat, doubled it up and threw it into the water.

"Won't Emily be surprised?" he said to himself. "Won't she be took aback when she sees me so spick and span.

He took off his waistcoat and sent it after his coat. Then he flung his hat into the stream, then his shoes and stockings, then his trousers.

"I'll certainly surprise the wife," he said.

Then, shivering a little in his thin underclothes and the evening air, he reached down for the package of new clothes. It was not under the seed bag so he hopped lightly to the back of the wagon and searched the floor on hands and knees. But the bundle was not on the floor either. For quite five minutes the farmer looked for it; and then, with a sigh, he took his old place again on the hard old seat, and drove off homeward through the darkness.

It was a long ride and a chilly one for the white, slim figure holding the reins but it ended at last, and the farmer hopped from the wagon and dashed nimbly indoors, hoping to reach his room unnoticed.

But his wife, a lamp in her hand, came full upon him in the hall. The strange, snowy apparition, moving so lightly, gave her a shock.

"Why, father!" she said.

But the farmer brushing her aside, sped upstairs three steps at a time.

"I thought I'd surprise ye, Emily," he said grimly, "and I reckon I've done it!"

Township School Boards Debated At Kemptville

The annual convention of the Eastern Ontario Educational Association took place at the Kemptville Agricultural School with a good crowd in attendance. The first session opened with the president's address by Mr. W. F. Bell of Britannia Bay, followed by a report of the secretary W. M. Morris of Toronto. The main feature of the opening session was a public speaking contest, which was open to the previous winners of oratorical contests held in the school of the 10 eastern counties of the province.

Contestants were present from Williamsburg, Carleton Place, Perth, Merrickville, Mountain, Moose Creek, Fitzroy Harbor, and Kemptville, and all showed splendid ability. The winner was adjudged to be Alexander McLean of Moose Creek, who represented Glengarry County, and who will now be eligible to compete at the public speaking contest held under the auspices of the provincial association next Easter in Toronto.

Valuable books were awarded to the eight contestants coming highest in Kemptville.

The second session opened with a debate. The subject was resolved that a Township School Board would serve the interests of rural Ontario better than the three trustee board.

The speakers of the affirmative were J. E. Anderson of Perth, and J. H. Ebbs of Almonte, while the negative supporters were George Comba, Almonte, and J. Muir, Almonte. Many instructive points wer brought out during the time alotted to this feature, and the affirmative side were found to be winners by a majority of one point only.

A Round Table Conference is an annual feature of the convention, and many questions came up for discussion. Among others, was the question whether a school board could be held liable for damages when a pupil receives injuries while using the playground equipment provided by the board. This was decided in the negative.

Other questions discussed included remuneration for school boards the time and age when pupils should be admitted to the schools, school lunches, etc.

"Cats that's meant for little boys to maul and tease is called Maultese cats. Some cats is reckernized by how quiet their purrs is, and these is named Purrsian cats. The cats what has very bad tempers is called Angorie cats, and cats with deep feelins is called Feline cats. I don't like cats."

Caller—"Look here, I want to see you about this paragraph announcing my resignation from the Chamber of Commerce."

Editor—"But, it's quite true, isn't it?"

Caller—"Quite. But I should like you to explain why you've printed it under 'Public Improvements'."

PRESENTATION TO WARDEN OF COUNTIES

At the closing sitting of the October session of the counties' council of the United Counties of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry, the warden, Angus A. MacDonnell, was the recipient of a beautiful gold watch and chain from his fellow members as an evidence of the esteem in which he is held and for the faithful and courteous manner in which he conducted the business of the counties during his tenure of office. Mr. MacDonell made a fitting reply, thanking the members for the nice gift and the kind words which accompanied it.

BAGGING POTATOES

Alliston Herald—Potato digging is no longer an operation with a flat tined fork, nor are the potatoes turned out with a plow anymore. The bagger has appeared and is doing all that has been claimed for it. This implement was demonstrated on Nicol Wilson's farm a few weeks ago and numerous potato growers decided to use it. Joining a number of townsmen who were going out to see digging operations on J. H. Cameron's farm The Herald saw the digger and bagger being operated by four men and a four horse team. The potatoes were running from 260 to 300 bags to the acre and the filled bags were being dropped off the bagger about every twelve feet.

Chesterville Girls Graduate From Cornwall General

(Cornwall Standard.)

On Thursday evening last, 18th inst. a most representative audience, filling to capacity the drawing rooms of the Colquhoun Memorial Home, assembled to witness the revival of the graduating exercises of the nursing staff of this Institution, which, since January, 1897, has constantly ministered to the suffering poor, regardless of color, race or creed. The chair was occupied by the president, Mr. F. B. Brownridge, manager of the Royal Bank, who has been most indefatigable in his efforts for the support and extension of the hospital's interests.

The proceedings of the evening were opened by an invocatory prayer, testifying to the Christian principles which underlie the eleemosynary and humanitarian work of an hospital, delivered by the Rev. James Foulds, M.A., minister of Knox Church.

Mr. Brownridge made an address, welcoming to the meeting the Board of Governors and their wives, the physicians and surgeons and their wives, the recent donors of the Hospital whose late munificent benefactions have so splendidly equipped and endowed numbers of the new private wards, the nurse, the new graduates, and their friends and relatives, and the members of the Aluminae Association.

Mr. Brownridge remarked that it was many years since the last graduating exercises had been held but he sincerely hoped it would now become an annual practice. He was informed by the Secretary, Mr. John C. Alguire, that there were to-day twenty-five young ladies in training which number could not possibly have been accomodated save for the kind generosity of Miss Bertha Colquhoun, in so splendidly enlarging the Home which was such a beautiful and useful memorial to her parents. Mr. Brownridge stated that the pressure of circumstance had demanded the new wing erected this summer, giving, as it did, a large increase in the number of private wards. It was a credit to the Counties' and to the Institution and was assuredly filling a pressing need.

To the graduating class he earnestly counselled them to ever remember that real and abiding success came, not by fortuitous chance, but by hard and constant work.

In conclusion, he expressed on behalf of himself as president, Mr. John Alguire, treasurer and Mr John Cline, vice-president and the entire body of Governors, scattered throughout the hospital district of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry, their profound and heartfelt thanks to the Reverend Sister St. George, Mother Superior, and to all the Sisters of the Religous Hospitallers of St. Joseph of the Hotel Dieu Hospital, Cornwall, for the abundance of beautiful flowers, and for the Christian affection which prompted the act which adorned the room that evening.

Dr. Alguire, M.R.C.S., F.A.S.C., then addressed the audience, speaking primarily to the graduating class themselves, whom he considered it a distinct honor to address. After very happily congratulating them on having arrived at "the haven where they would be" after coming through with marked success, the sea of tribulation which must presage all examinations, he dwelt at some length on those finer traits of character, which, when manifested in a nurse, mark her out as a leader in her exalted pofession. A gentle forbearance(an engaging quality ever worthy of emulation), coupled with the, perhaps, harder art, to wit, the ability to say nothing when time and tide do so require, he considered to be two precious stones in the foundation of a nurse's success. He wished to express on behalf of himself and his brother physicians his hearty congratulations and good wishes to the young ladies now faring forth on their mission of healing and benevolence. In conclusion he ventured to trust that the recollection of them by their patients, in the years to come would be:

"Sweet as the tender fragrance that survives,
When martyred flowers breathe out their little lives,
Sweet as a song that once consoled our pain,
But never will be sung to us again,
Is thy remembrance."

Mr. Earle Gower Poole then played very charmingly on the violin, accompanied by Miss Grace Poole on the piano, following which, in an impressive ceremony, Miss Lydia Whiting gave the Florence Nightingale pledge to the graduating class, viz.:—

Miss Cora E. Droppo, Chesterville.
Miss Maude M. Jackson, Navan.
Miss Gladys B. Fairbrass, Chesterville.
Miss Mildred A. York, Metcalfe.
Miss Mildred A. Crane, Massena.
Miss Prudence Maude York, Metcalfe.

Mr. Brownridge then presented the graduation diplomas, which had been beautifully illuminated by Miss Kathleen Alguire, and also the handsome sterling silver hospital pins which had just arrived from Messrs. Birks, of Montreal.

Dr. Hamilton, ex-M.P., for Cornwall and Stormont, then being called upon delivered a vigorous and earnest medical and surgical lines, but also in address backed by his many years of experience and activity, not only in hospital administration.

The doctor in the course of his remarks stressed particularly the many and varied advantages which manifestly are to be found in comparatively small hospitals as those in Cornwall are. In the great city institutions it is to the lot of the medical university undergraduate to whom fall the benefits of the experiences derived in the period of hospital training, whereas, in such a hospital as this, of which, he could personally speak after the lapse of years, it is the lot of the undergraduate nurse, that there day by day accrue, the benefits and advantages which flow from thorough, modern, scientific training.

In concluding Dr. Hamilton laid emphatic emphasis upon the prime necessity for the preservation of secrecy which was so necessary a requisite in a nurse, and also joined most cordially in every kind and hearty good wish to the out-going class.

Miss Margaret Atchison then delighted everyone with her rendition of the beautiful song "Dawn, Light and Birds," after which Mrs. J. Clifford Beach gave very effectively a most humorous skit on the medical profession entitled "The Enchanted Shirt."

Before the singing of "God Save the King," there occurred one of the most charming incidents of the evening, when the young graduates were individually presented with beautiful bouquets of roses from the Alumnae Association, following which dainty refreshments were served.

AN INTERESTING DECISION

A very interesting decision was handed down in the police court in Carleton Place on Friday by Magistrate R. A. Patchell on a charge laid under Sec. 90 (1) of the Liquor Control Act. This section reads: "Except as authorized by this act, no person not holding a permit under this act entitling him so to do, shall have any liquor in his possession within the Province." Claude W. Wilson, of Carleton Place appeared, before the magistrate, charged under this section.

The evidence adduced indicated that the accused had had his liquor permit cancelled some time ago. The accused's wife had obtained a permit in the regular way and had purchased some beer on her permit. It was admitted that the accused had consumed some of the beer.

W. H. Stafford, of Almonte, appeared for the accused, argued that the wife had obtained her permit and beer in the authorized way, and that there was nothing in the Liquor Act to prevent her from treating her husband in their own home. The magistrate held that the beer in the house was in possession of the wife and not of the husband and dismissed the complaint. —Smiths Falls Record-News.

The Question.

The minister was imploring an old man to repent his sins.

"Well," said the old sinner, "if you will answer me one question, I will come to church."

"What is the question?"

"It's this. Who was Cain's wife?"

"My friend," replied the minister, "you will never be able to embrace religion until you stop bothering about other men's wives."

Fifty Tons Hay Burn Standing Three Feet Water

A very considerable percentage of the 715 farm barns destroyed by fire inOntario in 1927 was caused by what is known as "spontaneous combustion." The losses sustained every year by this cause has led the United States Department of Agriculture to conduct investigations to find the cause. The Department states that although it has been recognized for centuries that stored hay, manure, and other farm products occasionally become hot enough under certain conditions to ignite, very little attention has been given to the problem until recent years. Even yet there is a derth of accurate information on spontaneous combustion. In this connection some interesting information was obtained following the heavy flood which took place in the State of Vermont last year.

A clear-cut case of spontaneous igition occurred near Middlesex, Vermont, when a barn containing fifty tons of hay burned while standing in three feet of water. No heating of the hay had been noticed before the flood, but considerable steaming had been noticed twenty-four hours after the water had receded. The flood occurred early Friday morning, November 4, and the water rose to cover the hay to a depth of seventeen feet. The barn burned between four and five o'clock on Monday afternoon, November 7, or about two days after the waters receded.

In a three-year period, more than four hundred barn fires in Ontario were investigated. The authorities concluded that "at least one-half of these fires had been directly and solely caused by spontaneous heating." It appears, also, from these investigations that there are a number of "mysterious" barn fires. Many of them are closely related to changes in farming. The present crops, now consisting largely of alfalfa and clover hays, can not be properly cured and put in condition to be housed, as was done in former days with crops which consisted principally of timothy. The oldtime custom of salting hay in the mow has largely disappeared, an unfortunate situation, as salting has been an accepted means of retarding combustion. New types of machinery, also may be held responsible for handling the crops so rapidly that it does not have time to cure properly before being stored.—Farm and Dairy.

WINGS

Coming to the Rex Theatre one day only, Tues., Nov. 6th. Matinee and night.

"WINGS" an entirely different picture. It's author utilized the aeroplane, this modern invention, to build up his dramatic situations, and, indeed, he has succeeded. The spectator is thrilled throughout the entire picture. It is difficult for one to describe the thrills one feels in the sight of one plane attacking another plane, of one group of planes attacking another group, and later seeing more planes, downed, and falling to the earth in flames. They are magnificent sights—they are, in fact, so magnicent, so impressive, so thrilling, that it is doubtful if one could feel more excited even if one were to watch actual aeroplane battles.

There is one situation where a giant plane, supposedly German, takes part in the battle, the equal of it has not been seen in other pictures or even in real life. It is a monster. For this reason, the battle in which it takes place is made more impressive.

The plot has been founded on a story by John Monk Saunders; it has been directed by William Wellman most skillfully.

BABY GROWS IN SUMMER

The growth of a boy or girl from babyhood makes an interesting study for one who is willing to keep accurate record of sizes, weights, and heights.

During the first year the avera baby grows about nine inches. If this rate kept up for ten years, the schoolboy of ten would be over eight feet tall, and a giant in the making.

During the second year, however, baby grows only three or four inches, and gradually decreases his growth per year from then on until he attains his full height around his twenty-fifth year.

As for weight, boys make their greatest gain in their sixteenth or seventeenth year, while girls put on poundage more noticeably in their fourteenth. Incidentally, although little boys and young men are stronger than girls and young women of their age, girls from eleven to seventeen are physically able to handle boys of their age.

From December until April neither boy nor girl will gain much weight or height. When April comes they will begin to shoot upwards again like little trees but not until hot weather will they begin to add weight quickly.

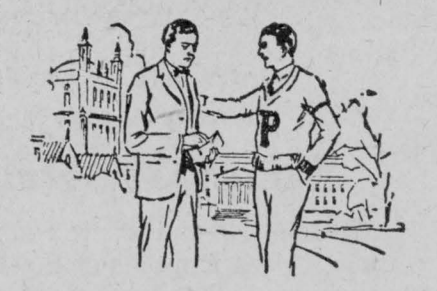
Faint Heart, Etc.

"What would your father do if I told him I loved you?"

"He'd refer the matter to me."

"And what would you do?"

"I'd refer you to the young man who proposed and was accepted while you were trying to make up your mind."



It seems hardly fair

Fathers and mothers used to look forward bravely, but not always happily, to the time when the boys and girls would go away to school in a distant city. It so often meant a break in the habits of home life—a sore trial.

Thanks to Long Distance—the boys and girls at school or college can still be kept within the family circle.

But don't expect them to pay for Long Distance calls out of their slender allowances. That seems hardly fair. The demands upon their none too fat purses are too frequent and too insistent.

Fix a day and hour when you will call them, and you'll find them eager to talk with you and welcoming the voice that can best cheer them on their way.

MURDER TRIAL AT CORNWALL

In a courtroom crowded to capacity the trial of Raoul Laflamme for the murder of his brother, Albert Laflamme, at St. Raphael Glengarry County, on June 10, opened yesterday afternoon before His Lordship Mr. Justice Raney in Cornwall. As Laflamme was brought into the court room, dressed in an old suit and overcoat, and a very much worn hat, there was little in his manner to indicate that he was on trial for his life. Many among those who thronged the scene of the trial are acquaintances of the accused and his deceased brother, and have more than a passing interest in the case.

When the charge of murder was read to the accused, he replied in a stout voice, "not guilty," and immediately the jury panel was called.

CAPTAIN CRAWLING TOMMY

When frowning storm clouds rose up out of the southeast the four vessels of the coasting fleet that happened to be becalmed off Bayhaven, scurried for that port like a covey of ducks scared up by a huntsman. Half an hour -later the staunch schooner Nomad of Riverport, flying light and bound home from Boston, faltered in her headlong flight like the chance victim of a desultory shot, and ran aground on Pinnacle Ledge. It was a gloomy dawn.

"Jehosaphat! The gas buoy's gone adrift!" yelled Captain George Halden, anxious first of all to vindicate his seamanship.

The Nomad's stern bumped out of water as if blown by an explosion; she heeled till her lee rail scooped under, and came to a stop. The crew frantically lowered the yawl-boat off the stern davits. Promptly it capsized alongside, and toppling seas drove the men into the rigging.

The schooner Gazelle, steered by Captain Thomas Crawley, was running neck and neck with the Nomad, speeding spearlike on the following crests. From her of all the coasters help might have been expected. But the Gazelle quickly winged out of sight.

"It's a wonder Crawley wouldn't come back and give us a hand!' roared Captain Halden from his perch in the main shrouds.

"Most likely his old ark has sprung a leak or carried away something!" shouted the charitable mate.

"Well, unless some one gets here pretty quick the crew of the Nomad will be eating sand!" predicted Captain Halden. "She won't last long with the fangs of the Pinnacle gouging into her bilge!"

"Here comes Keelhall!" shouted a man from the fore-rigging.

The schooner Polly and Clarissa had been foaming along only a short way astern. Captain Sam Keeyhall had just time to twist his wheel hard over. The coaster jibed with a deafening wrench of boom tackle and by a few fathoms missed dumping her own cargo of salt on the deadly Pinnacle.

"I'll stand by!' yelled Keelhall, and the crew of the Nomad cheered. The Polly and Clarissa flapped jauntily into the wind. Three of her oil-skinned seamen launched her battered yawl-boat.

Then out of the thickness to leeward appeared another schooner. It was the Cymbeline, with Captain Ben Slade at the wheel. He had run some distance past before he had seen what had happened to his consort. The men in the rigging waved again. Slade dropped his boat, and his mate jockeyed her too into the lee of the wreck. The storm was piping fresh from the southeast. Shredded clouds scudded low in the sky. The schooner hovered about, dipping headsails in a rain-lashed sea that frothed white with every rush.

Madly trying to free herself from the jagged ledge, the Nomad thrashed like a grounded whale. The yawl-boats backed and filled in her lee, fearing a crash against her half-sunk-enside.

"We'll jump and you pick us up!" roared Captain Halden, balancing on the rail.

"Won't she come off? What's the matter with crowding her over it?" bawled Keelhall's mate, to whom the waste of property seemed a shame.

"It can't be done! Whole bottom's gone out of her!" called Halden.

"We'll make a bluff at it anyway!" said the mate of the Cymbeline and shot his boat alonside the wreck. "Pile out, boys, and put the kites on her! It's a case of kill or cure!"

The Polly and Clarissa's men were good seconds. Deluged by hammering seas, the three crews laboriously set the rarely used topmast-staysail, then hoisted topsails. The Nomad rolled and pounded in impotent fury. The press of canvas laid her nearly on her beam ends. Gladly would she have slid into deep water if the prongs of the Pinnacle would give up their grip.

Keelhall maneuvered the Polly and Clarissa to windward of the wreck at risk of drifting ashore himself, and his yawl carried a line.. Slade followed suit.. Sails filled and hawsers tightened as the two impromptu tugs squared away. Under their mighty pull the Nomad thrashed and wallowed desperately. A slashing sea buried her decks. She shook herself,, slipped off the Pinnacle and stoop upright, plunging deep. A cheer rose from the salvers. The two rescue ships cast off their lines. Willing hands manned the Nomad's pumps.

They gushed green water, and when much green water comes from a vessel's pumps it is as her life blood.

"I'ts no use! Water's over the cabin floor!" announced Captain Halden. "There's prob'ly a hole big enough to drive a horse through.!"

"I'm afraid so!" agreed Cymbelin'es mate. "You fellow's collect your duds then, and we'll get out of this while the going's good. I give her ten minutes to stay atop of water!"

She floated just fifteen, drifted a few hundred yards to leeward of the ledge, and, while the crews lay on their oars and watched, stood on her stern and sank in five fathoms, square in the ship channel to Bayhaven.

"Ain't that the dickens of a note?" said Slade sympathetically as the castaways climbed aboard the Cymbeline.

"Guess this must be my unlucky day!" said Halden, looking ruefully at the slanting spars of his late command. "Blast that gas buoy, anyway!"

"Oh, I cal'late the underwriters can raise her!" encouraged Slade. "You're insured, ain't you George?"

"Right up to the handle!" said Captain Halden. "But that doesn't excuse Crawley for skinning out and leaving us in the lurch as he did."

"Well, let's go in and tell him what we think of him!" said Slade.

"He certainly has a chance to make a few explanations!" growled Halden.

Undeniably the behavior of grizzled Captain Thomas Crawley of the archaic schooner Gazelle, affectionately known as Crawling Tommy of the Goat, showed to poor advantage beside his fellow shipmasters. Often had the old man furnished topics for conversation for the whole fleet. They had chuckled delightedly at his interminable passages between neighboring coastwise ports; they had laughed indulgently when he had been blown to sea by a nor'-wester and made a fast record trip in spite of himself; they had slapped thighs and haw-hawed at a half-century of ridiculous scrapes he had got into and out of with a facility all his own.

Now, while they had risked shipwreck and drowning in a vain attempt to save the luckless Nomad, Crawling Tommy had cavalierly slipped out of sight in the storm and sneaked for the shelter they all wanted so badly to reach. And there was the less excuse for his defection, for the Gazelle was bound to Bangor without cargo, while the Cymbeline and Polly and Clarissa were going down-east with heavy freights of salt and could ill stay in the open.

When these two foamed into Bayhaven with the ship-wrecked crew aboard, the Gazelle, sails furled and halliards drumming briskly in the gusts, was snugly at anchor behind the breakwater. Crawling Tommy peering out of his companionway, watched the newcomers anchor near him.

"Where's George?" he bellowed through hollowed hands at the Cymbeline.

"'No thanks to you he ain't tangled up in the kelps of the Pinnacle along with his craft!" snapped Captain Slade. "We've got a bone to pick with you!"

After all was shipshape, Keelhall lowered his yawl-boat from the stern of the Polly and Clarissa. A man rowed him through pelting rain to the Cymbeline. There he collected Captain's Halden and Slade. Then the deputation pulled across to the Gazelle.

"You don't mean to tell me the Nomad stubbed her toe!" exclaimed Crawling Tommy as he hospitably took their painter. "Well, there's no use crying over spilt milk, I s'pose!"

"Tell you nothing," said Keelhall, sternly. "You know as much about it as we do! You weren't a cable-length from her when she ran high on the Pinnacle just before daylight!"

"Gas buoy had gone adrift!" put in Halden eagerly.

"What have you to say for yourself?" demanded Slade.

Captain Tommy turned pale. "Honest, I didn't see her! It was thicker than mud, and I didn' see any of you after it shut in!"

"That'll do very well to tell!" sneered Slade. "But I was farther away from George than you were and I saw him plunk her!'

"Me too!" chimed in Keelhall.

"My own private opinion, Crawley," declared the outraged Halden, "is that you were scared of your measly hide!"

"Gentlemen," said Crawling Tommy his weather-beaten old face still colorless, "I have got used to be being called a bungler and a failure, but never in my life have I been called a liar or a coward! I think you had all better go!"

"It's ablamed sure thing we don't hanker to stay round the likes of you!" retorted Halden. "Come on, fellows!"

"Well, I swan," said Keelhall as they rowed back to the Polly and Clarissa, "if Crawling Tommy didn't make me feel kind of small, somehow or other! I never saw him get on his high horse like that before!"

"Oh, he's a sly one!" said Slade ambigiously.

Some time afterward Captains Slade and Keelhall, condoling with the bereaved Halden in the warm cabin of the Polly and Clarissa, heard outside the mellow crackle of blocks and the clank of a windlass. Halden investigated.

"Jehoshaphat!" he exclaimed. "Crawling Tommy is getting under way, and here it is blowing and rainfir to make a crocodile shed tears!"

"Maybe he wants to shows us that he ain't a 'fraid-cat," suggested Slade.

"Well, if he goes out with that old ark and makes his run in this kind of weather I won't call him a 'fraid-cat, or anything else!" declared Halden.

"It's just possible the old duffer didn't see George pile her up, after all," said Keelhall thoughtfully. "His eyesight ain't what it used to be!"

"Maybe he'll go out and get cast away somewhere!" suggested the uneasy Slade. "Then maybe we'll wish we hadn't said all those nasty things to him! Why, Crawling Tommy wouldn't hurt a fly!"

"S'pose he's really going out?" asked Halden. "I wish I had time to scull over and take back some of those things I said. Why, Crawling Tommy would give the shirt off his back any day!"

The three erstwhile traducers of Tommy went out on deck. They saw the Gazelle standing out of the harbor, already dim through the curtain of driving mist. Keelhall wailed a recall on his patent foghorn.

"No us crying over spilt milk?" shouted the departing outcast through his megaphone.

"Just fairly drove him to sea with our slurs!" said Slade guiltily.

"I tell ye what we can do!" exclaimed Halden. "We can go ashore and climb up on the Head, and maybe we can see what kind of weather he's making of it! If it's too blamed hubbly out there, I for one will chip in and send the tug out after him!"

"That's the idea!" said Slade and Keelhall in unison..

On the storm-swept crags of Bayhaven Head they gulped brine that sprayed up from the foot of the cliff, and strained aching eyes into the pother seaward, but saw not a sign of the gallent Gazelle. They snatched a crumb of comfort from the discovery that the wind was moderating a trifle. Then they clambered down the rocks and returned on board.

"The next man that calls Crawling Tommy will have me to reckon with!" said Keelhall vindictively.

"Jehoshaphat! I only hope some one has the chance!" sighed Halden.

The storm blew itself out in the night. The next morning the sea beyond Bayhaven Head was a tilting glassy plain of burnished silver, only marred here and there by tiny cat's-paws from the fair northwest.

From Boston arrived a bristling moustached underwriter's agent who took stiff new oilskins from a suitcase and chartered the venerable tug Cyclops and plump little Captain Sol Stearns for a trip out to the wreck. His expert appraising eye would decide whether his company should raise the Nomad with derrick or pontoon, demolish her for her gear, or pay over the policy to her owners and let Uncle Sam dynamite her as a menace to shipping.

"Better hurry up and get that pesky gas buoy replaced!" said the agent irritably to Captain Sol, as if he considered him alone responsible for its absence. "It's worse for our business than a sleeper on a railroad track!"

"I'll have it replaced immediately!" said Captain Stearns solemnly.

As the Cyclops, with no less than four skippers aboard, breasted the sleek-barreled swell off Bayhaven Head it appeared that the insurance company was not to have first choice as to disposition of the wreck. Near the ledge floated another schooner, with sails lowered. Around her clustered a bevy of inquisitive lobster boats. Captain Sol jingled a bell, and the old Cyclops chugged along at the astonishing rate of six knots an hour.

"Jehoshaphat! If that ain't Crawling Tommy!" suddenly ejaculated Captain Halden. "Is he stripping the Nomad on his own hook?"

"Or has he piled up on the Pinnacle himself?" asked Keekhall.

"That sounds more likely to me!" declared Halden. "She ain't hung up very badly though."

"Leave it to him to make a mess of it!" said Slade.

But as the tug approached it was seen that none of the surmises was right. The Gazelle was not ashore on Pinnacle Ledge. She had fouled the spars of the sunken Nomad. One stuck up on either side of her.

"Blundering through the fog last night and ran straight between 'em, as I'm a livin' sinner!" said Halden. "I guess between ramming ledges and getting rammed by blooming hayseeds the Nomad'll lay her bones right there!"

"The Goat will be lucky if she doesn't lay her bones on top of her!" said Keelhall.

"You couldn't sink her with a Whitehead torpedo!" Slade assured him. "Besides, she's afloat right over the Nomad's deck this very minute, and it's dead low water now!"

"If she doesn't squat on the Nomad she'll do no hurt," said Halden with relief. "Those are new spars and rigging, every one, and you could lift her out of water by them. It'll take more than a rotten tub like the Gazelle to knock them out of her, I'm sure of that!"

The Gazelle had wedged herself between the masts of the wreck, cutting her aged headstays in the process. But so far from trying to clear his craft from her strange berth Captain Tommy and his crew of two seemed to be diligently fastening her there. Evidently they had wasted little time in crying over spilt milk. Coils of immense cable had been passed round the Nomad's masts and across the decks of the Gazelle, lashed at every conceivable angle. Huge wedges of spare spars and splintered fenders were jammed between the wreck's masts and the Gazelle's rough sides. By working patiently they had pushed off the Nomad's forward hatch with a long pike pole, dropped the Gazell's anchor into her hold and windlassed the chain till flukes caught under deck. The Cyclops might have untangled the two craft at first, but such a craft was far beyond her now.

The men on the tug stared at the performance, too astonished to interfere.

Presently Captain Tommy and his crew, having extended all the rope on board in a labyrinthine cat's-cradle that bound the two schooners together as one, sat down on the deck to rest.

"As tide waits for no man, I guess we'll have to wait for the tide," he said.

Gradually the Gazelle ceased her struggles in the long easy sea and no longer rose as it swept easily under her. As the water came she settled deeper and seemed to brace herself like a man about to lift a great load. Tied down to a sunken wreck, it might have seemed that the Gazelle would be submerged herself as the sea flowed. But without cargo she was buoyant as a bubble, and the sunken Nomad herself was water-borne very considerably. Slowly, inch by inch, the Goat lifted the Nomad clean off bottom with the irresistible lever of the silent flood tide.

"Give us the end of a hawser! You can do the rest!" called Captain Tommy.

Some hours later the Nomad, slung under the Gazelle by her strong masts and rigging, was towed into Bayhaven harbor and grounded on the flats within easy reach of repairs. Myriad lashings were cut, and the Cyclops pulled the craft out of their close embrace.

"We take off our hats to you, Crawley," said Halden, making amends in behalf of his fellow skippers. "You not only didn't cry over spilt milk, but you sponged up what you had lost and skimmed the cream off it!"

Two of a Kind.

A Scotsman, who was in a hurry to get home, purposely stepped in front of a moving car.

Just as he had calcuated. the driver picked him up and, finding a card marked: "Take me to this address in case of accident," started off as directed.

Arrived at the destination, the "victim" allowed himself to be lifted from the car, at the same time remarking:

"Thank ye! I'm a' richt the noo."

But the answer was unexpected.

"Weel, seein' ye'r ae brither," murmured the driver of the car, "I'll only charge ye what a taxi would. Gie me two-an-six an' we'll call it square."
