Despite adversity cub scout excels

Kim Robinson

MORRISBURG — Nine-year-old Scott MacLellan beamed with pride as his sister Courtney, five, examined the newest decoration on his cub scout uniform.

"I was coming here for games and fun but I never knew it would get up to this," gushed the Winchester boy following a ceremony in which David Rayner, scout commissioner for the St. Lawrence Region, presented Scott with the Award for Fortitude.

On Sunday afternoon, about 50 area wolf cubs gathered at the Morrisburg Scout Hall to witness the presentation, a surprise for Scott and at the same time a testament to how much he has astonished those around him.

Scott has an as-yet-undiagnosed condition, similar to cerebral palsy, which makes his muscles weak and movement difficult. When he was born doctors didn't believe he would ever walk, but with daily physiotherapy sessions and the aid of braces he has gained the use of his legs. He also has very weak lungs and has suffered from recurring bouts of lung infection.

Greg Greer, leader of the First Limoges Beaver Colony, initiated the effort to award Scott with the Jack Cornwell Decoration, one of the highest honors in scouting, in recognition of his dedication to organization and his determination in dealing with his physical challenges.

"I looked at the criteria and I felt that he fit it perfectly," said Greer at the ceremony, "It is essentially for someone who shows himself to be going beyond what other people may think he is capable of. It is a very difficult award to get.

"He couldn't walk or talk until he was five and it didn't slow him down. When he would come to the beaver meetings, he would always try to go a little bit beyond what he had done the time before."

Apparently Scott is so enthusiastic about scouting that he reminds his schoolmates to attend cub meetings.

When Greer discovered that the Jack Cornwell Decoration is usually reserved for boys with terminal illnesses he opted for the newer and equally prestigious Award of Fortitude for Scott, an award certified by the Governor General of Canada.

But, before Gov. Gen. Ray Hnatyshyn signed the citation, which recognizes Scott for "eagerly and enthusiastically participating in scouting activities despite adversity," the nomination had to be approved at the regional, provincial and national levels of scouting administration.

The campaign to recognize Scott's achievements began when he was a member of Greer's group in 1992. Scott had previous involvement with a beaver colony in Halifax which he joined at the age of six.

Doctors and teachers who have worked with Scott were asked to write letters on his behalf.

"It has taken a long time, two years, to get this award through. It's a long process," said Greer, who is very forthcoming in his praise of Scott, who has moved on to the Winchester cub pack.

"He's very bubbly in his personality. His enthusiasm is contagious with the other boys. If there was a game he couldn't participate in, he didn't sit on the sidelines and complain. He was cheering actively with the other boys."

Scott's parents, Terry and Andrea MacLellan, joined him during the presentation.

His mother said she feels the scouting environment has fostered her son's extraordinary development, explaining a boy like Scott might be put in a special category or be excluded altogether from organized sports.

Of scouting, MacLellan noted, "This is really one of the only things that he can do that he just feels like one of the other boys. Any badge he gets he's done on his own. He doesn't get any special treatment. Emotionally and in terms of his confidence it's been wonderful."

Greer agreed, "Scouting is Scott's. We didn't impose any limitations or any requirements, he created his own. It gave him freedom. In beavers there's no badge program so all they're supposed to do is learn to co-operate, to work as teams. There was no curriculum he had to follow at that stage. It gave him the opportunity to go at his own pace and to go as far as he wanted to go."

Scott was also helped along by the other boys in the group. Greer told of a scout sleep-over at the Canadian Museum of Nature in Ottawa, Scott's first night away from his parents. When Scott began to feel lonesome the other boys made a point of making him laugh so he would relax and want to stay.

"The next morning he felt that he had really accomplished something," said Greer, crediting Scott's family with giving their son the strength to perservere. He said Scott's success is the result of "a very determined family."

"These are parents who are very determined not to let Scott just sit, and I think that's rubbed off. He's picked up on it and run with it."

Proud parents

Regional Scout Commissioner David Rayner decorates cub Scott MacLellan with the Award for Fortitude as parents Andrea and Terry MacLellan look on. The award,certified by the Governor General of Canada, recognizes perserverance, dedication and a positive attitude in scouts facing personal difficulties.

Stress makes butting out tough for students

Up in smoke

WINCHESTER — A group of North Dundas District High School students will approach today, Weedless Wednesday, knowing addiction has deep roots that are hard to weed out.

The Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry Public School Board has been using hypnosis in an attempt to stem a trend which has more United Counties high school students lighting up than there were five years ago.

Norma Sharkey, the guidance counsellor who arranged hypnosis sessions at North Dundas, says there were varying degrees of success with the students, but most of them continued smoking.

Some of the students did cut back on their smoking and others had appeared to quit for a while, but Sharkey points out that, "Hypnosis is a very personal thing. Sometimes it has an impact that comes into effect later."

Student Katie Stewart, 16, found that her habit abated somewhat, but over time her cravings have returned.

"After a session I went out and had a cigarette and it didn't taste as good as it usually does, but they're tasting pretty good now."

Dr. David Kaufman, chief psychologist for the Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry Public School Board, conducted the three-session program at the high school last September. Kaufman stresses the importance of the smoker's determination to quit in the hypnosis process.

"Hypnosis does not control the person, the person controls hypnosis," says Kaufman. "Some students, if they're well motivated, can stop smoking after the first session. They're wishing it will happen and they make it happen."

He explains that anyone can be hypnotized if they want to be and he likens hypnosis to when someone becomes so engrossed in a TV program or a book that they don't hear another person talking to them.

"When you're in that la-la-land it's like a light form of hypnosis. Everybody has experienced that."

But smokers have to make the decision to quit themselves rather than feel pressured by any outside force.

"If someone else is telling them to stop they will unconsciously resist it."

FREEDOM NOW

Amy Zakaria, 17, agrees, "I went to the session because of what was happening with our smoking area. I didn't feel like walking across a field so I decided to quit. I didn't stop. I slowed down at the first part of it. Then I think I just realized that I didn't want to quit, I wasn't ready to."

Kaufman's sessions focus on building self-esteem and dealing with the stress which many smokers use their habit to relieve. The students lie on a comfortable surface like a gym mat and listen to the doctor's relaxing messages.

Joey Stewart , 18, attended the sessions with his sister Katie. He noted, "A lot of people smoke because they feel it relaxes them. He more or less made you relax and wasn't concentrating on smoking."

"It seemed like he rarely touched on it. He mentioned smoking maybe four times," added Amy. "He was really making an effort to find out why you were smoking and why you couldn't quit. We were talking about other things in our lives that bother us."

Adult student Carol Deavy said the session "was very relaxing. It didn't do anything for the smoking aspect but it was more of a session to quiet your body down."

Deavy, who has tried quitting several times, said it is stress that blocks her efforts to kick the habit. She also sees her home environment as a factor in her addiction.

"I don't feel so much like smoking in the school but at home all my friends smoke. I have maybe one friend who doesn't smoke."

The other students tell similar experiences.

"I tried it my first time with him," said Katie, pointing to her brother.

Similarly, Amy started smoking with an older sister. She said hypnosis would work best for someone who has just started smoking and doesn't depend on cigarettes for a release.

Farm update

Ethanol plant site chosen in Cornwall

Dianne Fetterly
Agricultural editor

CORNWALL — The announcement of a home for Eastern Ontario's new ethanol production facility is good news for area corn producers.

"It's like insurance for farmers...(farmers) will own the plant and hopefully add value to our corn," said Bud Atkins, Seaway Valley Farmers Energy Co-operative Inc. President and area representive for the Ontario Corn Producers Association.

Last Thursday, Seaway Valley Farmers Energy Co- operative Inc. announced the Cornwall Industrial Park in Cornwall as the preferred site for the 50-million litre per year ethanol production plant.

The Seaway project was originally started with the objective of improving market return for grain farmers and developing a new market for Eastern Ontario corn. The plant has the potential to utilize up to five million bushels or one-third of the corn produced in Eastern Ontario, annually.

As well, the facility will produce 38,500 tonnes of distillers dried grains, used in livestock feed, and 34,500 tonnes of carbon dioxide to be sold to industrial gas distributors.

In addition to the use of corn, the project will also create 263,000 work-hours of employment during the construction phase and over 30 full- time jobs in the plant. Construction on the facility is expected to begin as early as this spring with a project start-up date set for the fall of 1996.

The site for the $43 million plant is the result of six months of reviewing possible locations for the facility.

"Cornwall offers Seaway Valley the best economic picture with required services, close proximity to our feedstock and transportation to our markets," said Atkins. "Cornwall has been the victim of the recession and industry restructuring and the project will bring new economic activity and employment opportunities to the city."

Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs Minister Elmer Buchanan was in Cornwall, Thursday to hear details of the Seaway Valley Farmers Energy Co-operative's business plan for the ethanol plant.

"I am pleased that the Ontario government has been able to assist in the development of this business plan. It is another step forward in the development of the ethanol industry in Eastern Ontario which would mean new market potential for Eastern Ontario grain farmers as well as economic development opportunities benefitting the whole community," said Buchanan following the presentation.

Last month, the provincial government announced a $62,500 grant in jobsOntario funding to the ethanol project.

The grant was earmarked for SVFEC to develop a business plan for the next phase of the project. The primary objective of the second phase of the project is to set up a financial plan for the ethanol production facility.

As well, earlier in December, the federal government announced a new program to encourage the development of ethanol.

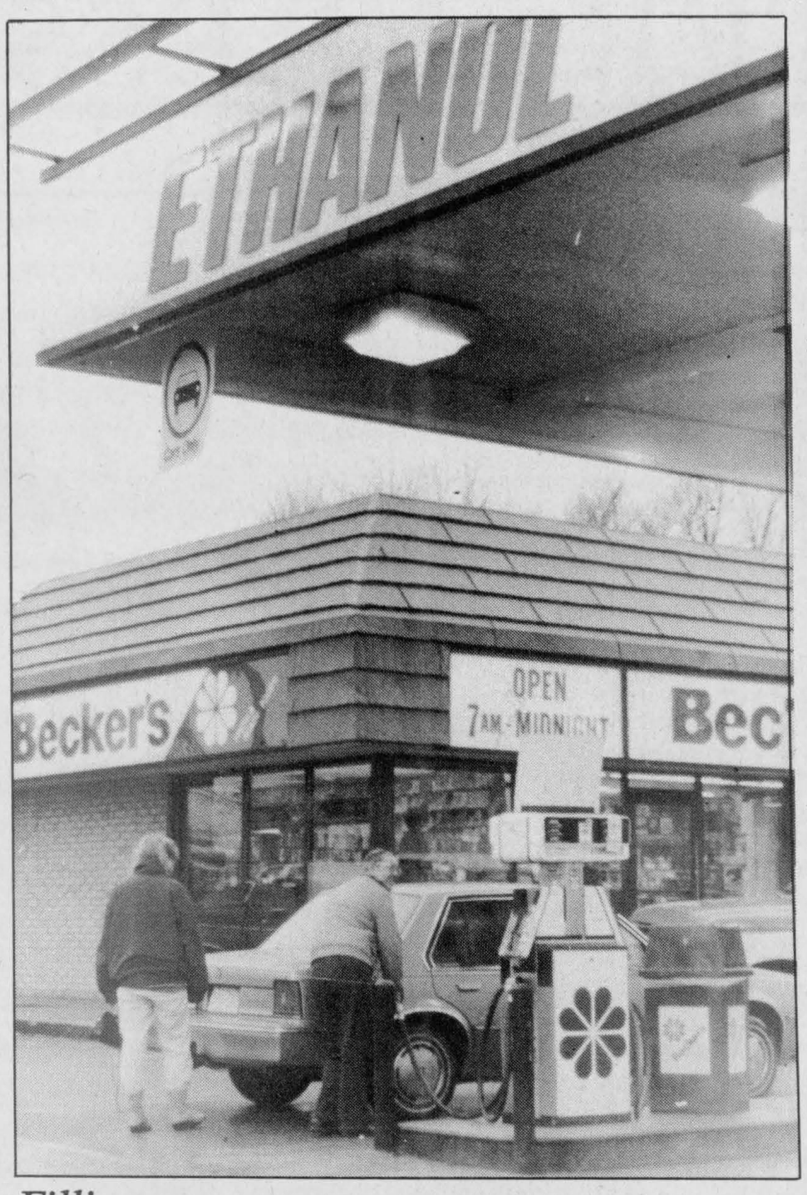
The National Biomass Ethanol Program consists of a repayable line of credit guaranteed by the federal government to make it easier for manufacturers to obtain financing from banks for building or expanding ethanol plants.

THE PRODUCT

Ethanol is an alcohol made from either renewable or non-renewable sources. Renewable sources such as corn, wheat, barley, straw or wood waste can be used in its production.

Vehicles do not need specific modifications to use ethanol-gasoline blends with up to 10 per cent ethanol.

At present, Canada produces approximately 26 million litres of fuel ethanol a year.



Filling up
Last week the Seaway Valley Farmers Energy Co-operative announced the new site for its Eastern Ontario ethanol production plant. The same week, Becker's convenience store in Winchester introduced ethanol blended gasoline to its customers. Pictured, a customer fills up at Becker's.

Seminar outlines arthritis facts

by Eda Van der Linden

KEMPTVILLE — Marion Falconer of the Canadian Arthritis Society was guest speaker for the afternoon session of WSA-Winchester's Rural and Farm Life in the '90s, Jan. 11.

Arthritis is a very costly disease. Of all the sufferers, 60 per cent are women and it affects one in seven families. Arthritis is inflammation of the joints and there are over 100 different kinds of arthritis. The two most common are osteoarthritis and rheumatoid arthritis.

Three million people in Canada suffer from osteoarthritis. It usually develops late in life and affects only a few joints. Joints move smoothly because of the liquid in the cartilage on the end of the bone. Overuse results in less efficient working and is very painful. There is no cure, but treatment consists of rest, splints, some medicine, special exercises to strengthen the muscles supporting the joints, and, perhaps weight reduction.

Rheumatoid arthritis affects 270,000 Canadians. It causes inflammation and can affect a few joints or the whole body. It can be in one finger of one hand, then occur in the same finger of the other hand. People suffering from a form of arthritis feel extremely fatigued, and sometimes very sick, with continuous flu-like symptons. A bloodtest will diagnose this illness. Anti-inflammatory drugs are available as treatment, although some of them have side effects. It is recommended that treatment be sought early on.

To help arthritis sufferers with daily living, Falconer showed the seminar participants many articles that are available; some you can make yourself. Some are quite simple, probably developed by arthritis sufferers themselves! A few mentioned were toothbrush holders, a tool to pull buttons through buttonholes, door knob openers, special walking canes, key lock turners for car and house keys, and openers for cans and medicine bottles, etc. These items enable many people with arthritis to maintain their independence.

Falconer also demonstrated many simple exercises to alleviate arthritis pain. She also brought the group up-to-date about the many aspects of arthritis. Her lively, humorous presentation imparted a great deal of information about a topic of great general interest.

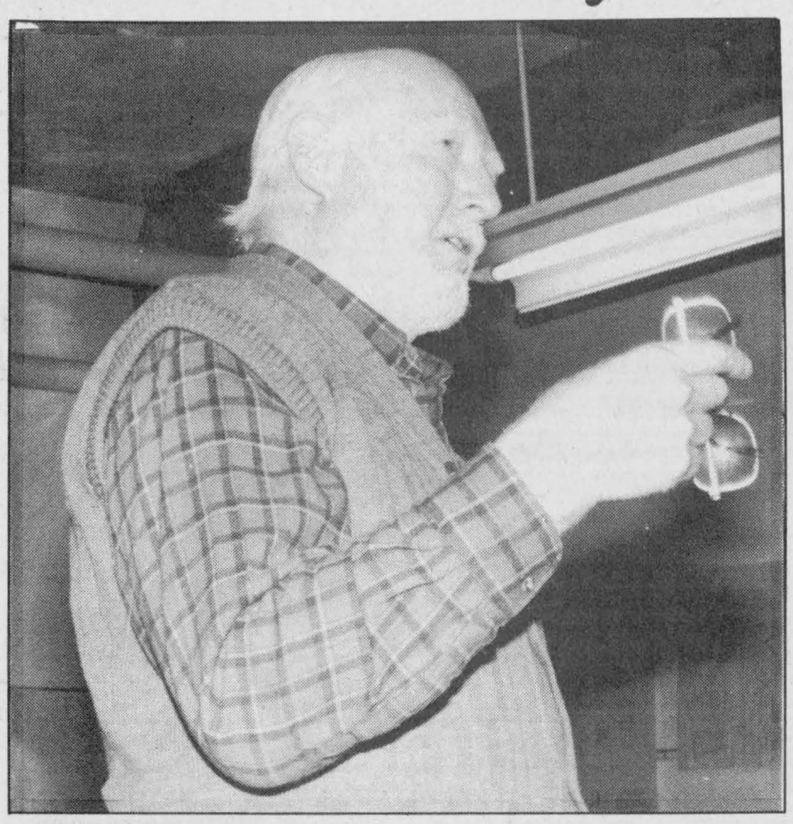
Self-sufficiency thrust of Bangladesh development program



Malcolm MacGregor of Morewood was guest speaker at a WSA-Winchester seminar held last Wednesday in Kemptville.
Press Photo — Fetterly

Dianne Fetterly
Agricultural editor

KEMPTVILLE — An underdeveloped country may gain self-sufficiency with the help of a local man.

A life-long resident of Morewood, Malcolm MacGregor spent four years in Dhaka, Bangladesh heading up an international aid program to that country for the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA).

MacGregor was guest speaker at the first of WSA- Winchester's Rural and Farm Life in the '90s seminars held last Wednesday in Kemptville.

The Crop Diversification Program (CDP) is a joint project between Canada, the Netherlands and Bangladesh. It is designed to increase the production of tubers and pulses in Bangladesh.

Increasing the production of vegetables such as potatoes, beans and lentils will add much-needed protein and fat to Bangladeshi diets, explained MacGregor. Currently, rice which is deficient in fat and protein is the main staple of the natives' diet.

Adding more varied crops to their production will also help Bangladesh depend less on importing oils and pulses, he added.

THE COUNTRY

Bangladesh was formed in 1972 in an area formerly East Pakistan. Originally the area was part of India, which divided over religious differences.

According to MacGregor, Bangladesh is actually a large delta with very deep, fertile soil formed from many years of sediment worn down from the Himalayas. The climate is hot and wet during the summer and dry in the winter.

The country has a population of 120 million with about 80 per cent living in rural areas. The average farm size is slightly under one acre with the average family having five or six members. Seventy-five per cent of the population is Muslim and English is the second language.

While 50 years ago, Bangladesh's fertile soil enabled farmers to produce an abundance of food, today's dense population has put a strain on the country's ability to be self-sufficient in food production. For this reason, the need for a crop diversification program is very important, explained MacGregor.

Bangladesh has three cropping seasons but, without irrigation, can only grow rice in wet or monsoon seasons.

"All people can do is try to increase production on the limited amount of land (they have)," said MacGregor.

THE PROGRAM

The Crop Diversification Program has introduced a number of concepts to Bangladeshi farmers to aid in their move for self-sufficiency in food production.

Various new crops with irrigation, will grow in Bangladesh's dry season. Wheat, potatoes, soybeans, chick peas, lentils and sunflowers have all been introduced with some success, said MacGregor.

A good oilseed crop, sunflower fared very well. The only problem was a lack of seed. Chick peas, soybeans and lentils did very well during the dry season when irrigation was used. The only problem with soybeans was getting the people to cook them. As part of the program, extension workers set up workshops in the villages to teach women how to prepare soybeans, explained MacGregor.

Program directors also set up research plots and invited farmers to view the crops. They held seed fairs to show off new products and experimented with inter-row cropping in the area. Sugarcane, which takes about a year to mature, was underseeded to mustard.

The group also encouraged women to take up farming and educated the public on proper nutrition. They even designed treadle pumps for the farmers to pump irrigation water, and have encouraged homestead gardens.

MacGregor also says he sees a need for more mechanized equipment like tillers. Farm implements currently used are ancient and often pulled by draught animals. The large number of draught animals are compounding the problem by eating up much of the green space.

Manure is the main source of fertilizer with some chemical fertilizers used. However, much of the manure is used as fuel not as fertilizer.

Last June, the CDP was one of four international projects to receive an award of merit from the Canadian Export Development Association. CIDA is responsible for Canadian aid to under-developed countries.

Planning a new farm or rural enterprise?

Grenville ag report
by Stuart Leyenaar, P.Ag., Grenville County Ag Rep.

KEMPTVILLE — The process of business planning is attracting more interest as people consider ways to diversify or develop new farm enterprises. Actually, it's not just traditional farm enterprises — rural business activity in Grenville County is diversifying as opportunities are identified. These may involve new crops or livestock, new ways of value added marketing and new service enterprises which may cater, for example, to rural recreation or tourism.

In this column I'll give a brief review of the process I recommend whenever people enquire regarding business planning. The first step in business planning and the decision making process is to establish your goals. A good goal is one that reflects your values and aspirations. It should be written, measurable, and attainable within a realistic time frame.

The second step in business planning is to inventory your resources. We normally recommend that you take stock of your assets at least annually at the beginning or end of your fiscal year — Dec. 31 for most businesses. This inventory should be comprehensive — including both current and capital assets and also listing the balances of all accounts payable, loans and mortgages outstanding at year end. Whenever assembling balance sheet information, make sure to date the balance sheet and indicate the method of valuation.

The next subject to be examined is the feasibility of your proposed enterprise. This includes a review of your suppliers and the prices of inputs needed, an assessment of your competitors, and your customers or the market. It is essential that you do the arithmetic! What is a realistic projection of the revenue to be generated in the coming year? The next question is the expenditures your business will need to cover. Putting these together in an orderly fashion gives you a cash flow projection. The bottom line is telling — if your outflow exceeds your income, your upkeep may lead to your downfall!

If you've completed these steps, the main part of business planning has been done. The next steps however, are equally important. They're to make the decision and implement the plan.

This has been a very quick overview of business planning and, yes, there is much more involved in achieving successful results. One of the keys to success is in sharing the entire process with other members of your team. Your family members, business partners and employees are an integral component of most successful business ventures. Other members of your business team may be your banker, your accountant, your business management advisor or agricultural representative, industry sales and service personnel and others.

At the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs we have a wide variety of resources and programs available to assist you in planning a new farm or related enterprise. Seminars and workshops, printed materials and individual or farm family consultations are available throughout Ontario. We encourage you to use these resources to achieve success with your 1995 business enterprises.

The "Lone" Ranger

Born on Jan. 18, 1930

At the age of 23, from Holland he came,
Had many adventures, but wanted someone to share his name,
He "robbed a cradle", and off with Jane he went,
On a dairy farm near Osgoode, 30 years they spent.
They had only two girls, but each found a man
Now with eight grandchildren, they have quite a clan.
He now raises a few beef, has hobbies and such,
But misses his milk cheque, beef doesn't bring in much.
However, with a small pension, he'll probably survive
Because you see, he's just turned sixty-five!

Happy Birthday Dad!
Ranger Devries
With love from your children and grandchildren
