Predict weather by observing nature

Before the T.V. or Radio weather forecast ever existed, people could predict the weather simply by observing nature.

Below, are statements about weather and nature. Each one is followed by three words. Underline the correct one and add up your score at the end.

1. They behave strangely just before a violent storm.
   a. people
   b. animals
   c. flowers
2. They run out of their holes, squeal and frolic just before a storm.
   a. field mice
   b. gophers
   c. ants
3. They fill up the beach just before a storm to seek shelter on land.
   a. turtles
   b. sea crabs
   c. crocodiles (when was the last crock you saw at the beach in Morrisburg or Iroquois?)
4. They try to fly in homes under low pressure systems.
   a. butterflies
   b. mosquitoes
   c. bats
5. They carry their young away from their homes just before a flooding rain.
   a. raccoons
   b. monkeys
   c. weasels
6. They sing only when the air is hot and dry.
   a. bluebirds
   b. locusts
   c. sparrows
7. Their leave turn about 24 hours before a rain.
   a. morning glories
   b. ferns
   c. hardwood trees
8. Outdoor fires burn more vigorously just before:
   a. bad weather
   b. good weather
   c. a tornado

Warn children about water danger

The Royal Life Saving Society of Canada (RLSSC) is urging parents and teachers to keep children away from rivers and streams during the spring thaw.

The Society is also warning the province's snowmobile and ice fishing enthusiasts to exercise extreme caution over the next few weeks as Ontario's lakes, rivers, streams and creeks continue to melt and swell after months of cold weather and heavy snowfalls.

Dozens of Ontario residents die this time of year by falling into the fast moving rivers or through thin ice. Rescue is often impossible because victims are swept away so quickly by the cold current, said RLSSC public education director Ed Bean.

In 1991, the latest year for which complete statistics are available, 23 people died in water-related accidents during the months of March and April, in Ontario.

"This is an extremely dangerous time of the year to be near open bodies of water," Bean said. "Children are especially vulnerable because they're attracted to water."

Drowning is the third leading cause of accidental death in Ontario, claiming 216 lives in 1991. Statistics show that 15 Ontario children under the age of 12, who were simply walking or playing near water, died in drowning accidents in 1991, Bean said.

The Royal Life Saving Society is a national, charitable organization dedicated to preventing drowning through lifeguard and lifesaving training, public education, research and advocacy. Last year in Ontario more than 90,000 people enrolled in the Society's lifesaving and lifeguarding courses.

Perennials rising

by Jeff Arsenault

I've heard all sorts of excuses for not having a perennial garden. Some gardeners are afraid that these flowers will take over and stick out like a sore thumb. Others dislike staking them up after heavy rains. And some people find perennials expensive. Not true. Perennials range from .99 to $6.99, depending what variety you want. These can last a very long time in the garden.

We can all grow perennials in our garden. No matter how small the garden, we can achieve a satisfying scale. It is very simple. Start with a perennial that you are comfortable with, whether it is the colour you like or the size.

The purpose for a perennial in your garden might be to cover up an old gas meter against the house or to cover a wall that you would like to hide.

My garden in Morrisburg, Ontario (named "The Garden") has a main border 30 feet long and five feet wide. It is filled with many perennials such as hosta, rudbeckia, coneflower, foxglove, lupines, primrose, poppies, baby's breath, and many more varieties. Initially, I didn't know how to start my perennial garden. My primary thoughts were on colour, and secondary thoughts on space. I decided to cover a large area in the rear of the flower bed. Small perennials were then placed in the front, and each plant in the garden stands out.

The grouping of various colours, textures and shapes is one of the interesting challenges of gardening. Each perennial is distinctive, yet each makes its own contribution to the harmonious blend of colour and form. Whether your garden is a cramped backyard or a small piece of land around the house, there is always room to use perennials.

Today, in small suburban gardens, perennials are regaining their fame. The development of the mixed border in which perennials are grown with other types of plants, such as annuals, roses, flowering bulbs and shrubs, provides a display that lasts longer. This makes a colour statement in the garden.

Achieving an attractive garden greatly depends on how plants are arranged. Early flowering plants will bloom from mid-June to late July, and late flowering plants bloom early August to late September. Flowering times can change if the summer has been too hot and dry, or cold and wet. Keeping notes can be an asset to you. Visit other gardens in your area to see how they planted a perennial garden. No book or catalog will provide the exact thing you are looking for.

Finally, just think of perennials this way. If you plant one, you have to plant another. Different shapes and forms will continue in the garden. At this rate you'll have the kind of garden you've always admired, one of great sense and style.
