Well Known Author To Visit Winchester

ROBERT J. C. STEAD WILL BE THE GUEST SPEAKER AT 100 CLUB LADIES' NIGHT ON SEPT. 20.

Word has just been received that the speakers committee of our 100 Club has been fortunate in securing Robert J. C. Stead, the poet and novelist, as the guest speaker for Sept. 20th at their "Ladies' Night" luncheon at Hotel Winchester. Mr. Stead is a native of Lanark County, Ontario. In 1923 he was elected president of The Canadian Authors' Association. He was also chosen to provide for the showing of The Literary production of Canada, at the British Empire Exhibition in London, England. At the age of twenty-eight, Mr. Stead produced his first book of poems "The Empire Builders," which met with exceptional favor, and was given gratifying notice by the literary editor of the Toronto Globe. It was also recognized by Earl Grey, Governor-General-General of Canada. The book sold to the extent of about four thousand copies. Later he wrote other volumes, of poetry, the "Songs of the Prairie," "Prairie Born," etc. His first novel was "The Bail Jumper," which first came from the press of Fisher Unwin in England. This was followed by "The Homesteaders," and "The Cow Puncher," which were both brought out in Canada and America. The latter sold seven thousand copies. One of his most recent novels is the "Copper Disc," which came out in 1931. All his novels have been serialized in magazines or newspaper syndicates. At present, Mr. Stead is director of Publicity in the Department of Immigration and Colonization at Ottawa which post he has filled for the past seventeen years. He is an exceptionally interesting speaker and members of the 100 Club with their ladies may look forward to a rare treat in the visit of this outstanding Canadian author.

Barns Destroyed By Fire At Chesterville

Fire, believed to have been caused by an overheated part on a threshing mill, totally destroyed the barns on the farm of Mrs. John Alford, of Chesterville, on Friday evening last, along with the season's crop of hay and grain. Two calves, which were housed in the building, also perished in the blaze.

Mr. George Gillard, who is operating the farm for Mrs. Alford, had been engaged during the day in threshing the season's grain crop. About 4 p.m. the work had been stopped and the men retired to the house for supper. About 4.30 one of the men noticed smoke issuig from the building and at once raised the alarm. By the time the men reached the barns, they were a seething mass of flames.

The Chesterville fire brigade was called but their attention was directed towards preventing the spread of the flames to nearby buildings. It was feared for a time that the buildings of Mr. Wesley Hamilton might fall prey to the fire. It is reported that the loss, which runs into several thousand dollars, is partly covered by insurance.

He Did What They Wanted

By HELEN ROSE

Arthur Walley never knew happiness till he married Miriam Ainger. He never knew happiness afterwards.

Before he met Miriam, Arthur Walley was an honest, self-respecting, contented little man. He had a small but quite responsible post in an old-established firm. He had saved a little money.

He was rather a small, insignificant-looking person, but as his own nature was affectionate and generous, he was neither envious of other men's success, nor conscious of his own rather small position in life. And he did not contemplate that he might be passed over for some more prepossessing male.

But he was. And Miriam Ainger would never have looked at him if she had not been much older than she looked or said, and had been able to bait her line cleverly enough for the more wary male.

For Miriam had a mother, and anyone could have seen that in far less than twenty years' time, Miriam would be the very spit of her mother. This was largely why Miriam had never succeeded in getting married.

But Walley never noticed such things. Miriam seemed to him adorable and beautiful, and he was deeply grateful to her for preferring him to other sleeker, glossier males. He thought of her mother, Mrs. Hoskin, as a nice old lady.

And the two female spiders spun their web. They knew Walley had a little money laid by. They thought it would be wax in their hands. And there was no one else.

Yet some faint ghost of romance lingered in Miriam's soured heart, and she hesitated at the last moment from taking this meagre little man to her disappointed bosom. Her mother, however, who had no such close relationship to visualize as Miriam, egged her on.

"It's your last chance," she said, fatefully. "Things have missed you somehow, Miriam, and you won't do any better. He's a pretty poor fish to look at, I grant you, but he's got a lot of money. Make him buy a house. We might as well live rent free."

"He'll want furbishing up," said Miriam, gloomily. "He's really a sight. I'm ashamed to be seen out with him."

"Well, we can alter all that," said her mother, firmly.

So Miriam married Walley, and Miriam's mother came to live with them.

Walley bought, through a Building Society, a nice little semi-detached house in an unpretentious suburb. To Walley the possession of a house of his own (it would be in about fifteen years' time) was a marvellous achievement. It was the sign of a settled and well-ordered life.

The whole of his life was centered in Primrose Villa, and Miriam (Mrs. Arthur Walley). And Miriam's mother seemed so kind. Like having another mother of his own, he told her.

At first Miriam was loving and grateful. She filled the home with her large, dark beauty. And Mrs. Hoskin bided in her lair.

Then things mysteriously changed. Miriam, measuring her Walley, began to grow ambitious. They must have a maid. And Walley, feeling god-like, said "Let there be a maid." And there was one. And then a piano, and then a wireless, and then a luxurious drawing-room suite, and more smarter clothes, till Walley's income, that had seemed to him so ample, became the wages of a hireling.

One day he explained to her very frankly and lovingly that they must really try to be more economical. They were spending far too much, and, with a fond hug, they might have to save for the future! — an Look at you! Those awful clothes! Men don't dress like that now. You idea that Miriam had fostered without the slightest intention of fulfilling. To all coaxing he remained unexpectedly firm — for her own sake.

This new fur coat that she wanted. Yes, he would love her to have it, but not just at the moment. And her green cloth with the lynx collar suited her beautifully.

It did. But Miriam desired the new fur coat more than anything else. She had set her heart upon it. The woman three doors down, whose windows she was obliged to pass on her way to the shops, had a new imitation musquash coat, and her consequent swagger was gall to Miriam. But no imitation musquash for Miriam! No! A real musquash fur coat, which Miriam had seen in High St., Kensington, last week, at a ridiculously low figure.

She brought all her guns to play on Walley without avail. Walley was rather proud of resistance in the face of such temptation. But he would not run into debt, even to please Miriam, and he was already pledged to the neck to the hire-purchase people. Later, perhaps, when they'd paid the final instalment on the piano. But not now.

Then Miriam gave way to a temper which she had hitherto hidden from Walley.

"What do you think I married you for?" she stormed. "Not to live all my life in this poky little hole, without a rag to my back. You say we can't afford it. Well, why don't you go out and do something? Why don't you get a better job and make some sort of a name for yourself? You'll never get a thing as you are. look like a funeral mute. I've told you a hundred times to buy a decent suit of plus fours, only you're so darned obstinate. No — don't come near me. I'm not going to be mauled about for nothing! . . . You're not going to get just what you want, and then refuse to buy me things I want —and ought to have. Mean! That's what you are — mean and stupid! I was a fool to marry you."

She rushed out, banging the door.

Everything crashed. He was not an honest, dependable fellow in a good, safe job. He was not a proud and indulgent husband. His home was not a pretty, well-furnished abode of peace. His wife was not a loving and appreciative mate.

He was a miserable failure. His self-respect was mortally wounded. His pride shrunk pea size. His home reeled about him. His very clothes shrank on him.

After that both women used the goad more freely. They talked to each other of other men who had got on in business. Walley had always thought of himself as a good business man in a modest way. They criticized his clothes continually, and he had always been rather proud of his neatness and good taste. They derided his little home as stuffy and suburban.

He read his failure in their cruel eyes. "A beauty like Miriam," said her mother, "demanded a very different social position."

And when a friend of Miriam's married, a photograph of the bride and bridegroom appeared in the papers, and Miriam's rage was kindled afresh.

"A plain little nobody like her!" she stormed. "But then, she's married a real smart fellow. Look at him! Frightfully smart! And he's been made a partner in his firm, too."

"Yes, and that's where you ought to be," chimed in her mother " in a good position, with something to look forward to . . . That girl's not got half your good looks, Miriam, but she's been clever enough to get hold of a man who'll carry her with him."

And in that moment, seated quietly before the fire, in clothes suddenly grown shamefully cheap and shabby, such hatred rose in Walley that he nearly fainted.

He hated Miriam because she had broken his world in pieces, because she had never loved him. But he hated Miriam's mother with a far fiercer hatred. He had been Miriam's toy and her slave. She had broken the toy, and beaten the slave. But Mrs. Hoskin had steadied that hand, and knotted that whip.

One day she was ironing one of Miriam's night-dresses, an elaborate yellow satin affair, in the kitchen, and Walley was stoking the Ideal Boiler. As she held up the nightdress she said spitefully,

"Somehow this doesn't seem to go with this house — and you!" And she laughed.

Walley turned, and with perhaps regrettable indecision brought the small poker down hard on Mrs. Hoskin's head. And Mrs. Hoskin crumpled up and fell with a groan.

The noise brought Miriam in from the drawing-room. She saw her mother on the floor, and her husband, with more than murder in his face, still holding the poker. She screamed.

"She laughed at me," was all Walley said.

And that was all he said afterwards, when he stood on trial for the attempted murder of his mother-in-law. He didn't accuse her. He did not excuse himself. In fact, he seemed rather pleased in some subtle, peculiar secret way.

Miriam had her picture taken specially in all the papers, and there being no other very exciting topic of the moment, she and Walley and her mother stood in a considerable amount of limelight. Miriam had a special album for newspaper cuttings.

The jury, composed nearly entirely of married men, found him guilty of attempted murder under great provocation, with a strong recommendation to mercy. The Judge, a bachelor, and conscious that he had escaped a mother-in-law, gave him the minimum sentence.

Miriam came to see him after sentence. She was weeping and furious. It was one thing to be the leading lady in an exciting trial, quite another to be the wife of a convict.

"How could you Arthur!" she moaned. "Poor mother! And what am I going to do? It's too awful!"

He looked at her and there was all the cold pleasure of hate in his eyes.

"You got what you wanted," he said. "I've made a name for myself. We've been in the papers. You've had your photograph published. I've put 'Primrose Villa' on the map for you. And," he paused, "quite soon I shall have a perfectly new suit of clothes!" — London Tit-Bits.

City of Hamilton last year had a bill of $22,000 for repairing shoes for those on relief. Officials want to put the people on their feet again but feel that method is too expensive.

Your Handwriting Tells Your Real Character!

By GEOFFREY ST. CLAIR
(Graphologist)
All Rights Reserved.

A correspondent sends me samples of the handwriting of several well-known film stars and asks me to analyse the writings for her. There is so much of interest in these analyses that I am making them the subject of a special article.

Perhaps you have wondered why many men have been led into the different pursuits in which they have gained fame and fortune? It is immensely interesting to think what might have been if different individuals had been born with traits of character that were entirely different from the real characteristics of their nature!

Many men and women are born into this world with definite talents and abilities, that they must learn in order to take full advantage of them. Some go through life and never even learn their proper talents while others find and develop them early in life.

Take the handwriting of John Boles, a well-known star. The dominant trait in his character is self-reliance. This is the quality that makes him depend only on himself for anything he wants done. He is not surly (quite the contrary) to his many friends, but, at the same time, he looks to one man only to get what he wants—and that man is himself.

John Boles could not be anything else if he desired—there is an independence of thought and action that will not allow him to think of help when he has a problem to face. He is close-mouthed about his personal affairs, and will usually have them solved before other people have heard about them. Decisive, quick-thinking —a man of action—John Boles.

Some time ago I analysed the writing of Ramon Novarro. This film star was very fortunate in finding his talent and making it the driving force of his life. His writing shows, as all those who have seen his films know, that he is a great dramatic actor—that he can interpret a role in a way that few people can even approach, but he has also another ability and another very outstanding talent with which he has won recognition—his ability in music. The rhythm and breaks in his writing show immediately to the handwriting analyst—a talent and appreciation of the musical arts.

You, my reader, may not have any tremendous talents like these well-known film actors. On the other hand, you may have some outstanding ability with which you could, if you recognized it, and cultivated it, acquire a good position or fill a particular niche in life. But you must understand yourself; you must realise the latent abilities within yourself and, once recognizing these, set to work to make the most of them.

A graphological delineation will not invest you with particular powers or abilities; it will show you whether or not you possess some outstanding talent which you ought to cultivate. And it will show you to a greater understanding of yourself and your problems.

* * *

Would you like to know what talents you have? Do you wish to know what your handwriting tells about your character and that of your friends? Send specimens of the writing you want analysed, stating birth-date in each case. Enclose 10c coin for each specimen and enclose with 3c stamped addressed envelope, to: Geoffrey St. Clair, Room 421, 73 Adelaide St. West, Toronto, Ont. All letters are confidential and replies will be mailed as quickly as the volume of mail will permit.

Iceland Isn't Such A Cold Place

An Icelandic nurse, spending six weeks in Toronto, doing public health and hospital observation work for the Red Cross, is Miss Sigviduv Bachman.

Miss Bachman is a graduate nurse of University College Hospital, London, with post-graduate work in public health at Bedford College, England. She has come to Canada at the request of the Icelandic Red Cross Society, under the Exchange Committee of the Canadian Nurses' Association, to observe methods here and take back to the work in her native land, to which she returns in the fall, the benefit of her experience.

"The Icelandic climate is not nearly so severe as people think it is—it is modified by the Gulf Stream," Miss Bachman said, in an interview. "This year we had the best May we have had in years—much warmer than it was in England."

Schools close in May, not because of the heat, but on account of the short days in winter. People like to make the most of the summer and get the children off to the country for a long vacation. Some of the days in November and December do not have more than five or six hours of daylight, she added. "The housing is quite good—'stone' houses, we call them, mostly made of cement, with general heating, of coal, with furnaces." The State hospital, as well as the houses in that area are heated from the geyser, "the biggest hot springs in the world," she said. Most of the women and girls of Iceland are adopting the Western dress, although many of the older women still cling to their national costume.

Business Better Beatty Declares

Halifax.—Canadian business generally is benefiting by a sound, steady improvement which has been in progress for a considerable time, Sir Edward Beatty, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, said here recently as he stepped down from a special train which is carrying him through the Maritimes an an annual tour of inspection of company enterprises. The only cloud on Canada's industrial recovery front, the rail chief asserted, was in Western Canada, where crop prospects were indefinite and where there was no assurance that the 1935 yield would be readily marketed.

Doctors Will "Leap" To Their Patients

Moscow.—Delegates to the National Parachute Congress were told recently a large number of doctors would be trained to jump with parachutes so medical aid can be sent people in isolated settlements.

This problem is particularly acute on the northern coast, where communications are cut off for a great part of the year. The doctor-parachutists will carry full medical equipment when they leap.

Eight-ounce Baby Lived For A Day

New York—An eight ounce baby girl died after an all-day struggle by five physicians and two nurses to keep her alive.

The tiny infant, whose birth was premature by 4½ months, was the first child of Patrolman Terrence Borelli, 29, and his wife, Marjorie, 26.

Physicians said the baby was normal in every respect save size. She measured 13 inches in length and had a head circumference of nine inches.

The infant, born at 6:25 a.m., was placed immediately in an incubator. Late in the afternoon she seemed to stop breathing, but after a series of injections and increased applications of oxygen she appeared to rally. At 6:45 p.m., Dr. Lester Samuels pronounced her dead.

GOOD HABITS RID NERVE AILMENTS

Today we hear a good deal about "nervous breakdown." Yet statistics show that, despite the depression, the immediate health of the people has not been affected. There is little evidence to substantiate the popular belief that there is an increase in the number of nervous ailments of this type.

The expression "nervous breakdown" has come into common use. In spite of our increased knowledge of the nervous disorders, such as "neurasthenia," "hysteria," "psychasthenia," there are cases difficult to solve. In spite of our increased knowledge, all too many persons suffer from some form of nervous ailment.

SYMPTOMS OF DISORDER

The so-called victim of nervous breakdown feels mentally and physically tired. He is unable to do his work and suffers from vague pains and aches. There may be no apparent cause for the symptoms. As a rule, however, this can be determined by the physician. But sometimes it is difficult even for him to be sure what is the underlying trouble. In consequence, the patient continues to suffer.

The most common form of nervous breakdown is that known as "anxiety-neurosis." In this condition there is constant fear of some serious physical disturbance. There may be complaint of palpitation of the heart or weakness in the legs. Perhaps the victim cannot digest his food properly, sweats easily and has shortness of breath. But will all his misery he avoids consulting his physician for fear he may beridiculed.

UNFOUNDED BELIEFS

For many years it was a popular but unfounded belief that nervousness is a complaint confined to the well-to-do. Another mistaken idea is that city folks are more susceptible to nervous breakdown than the small town or country dweller. This unpleasant condition occurs without regard to occupation or financial standing.

The first thing to do when there is a suspicion of a nervous breakdown is to consult a physician. A complete physical examination will determine if there is any organic trouble. Nervousness is caused usually by some functional disturbance in the body. It may be due to faulty eating or living habits.

Every effort should be made to improve the general health and to build up the resistance of the body. An edequate diet, including plenty of fresh fruits and vegetables, and foods abundant in minerals, such as phosphorus and sulphur, are especially beneficial in overcoming nervousiness. These important minerals are to be found in lemons, grapefruit, spinach, rice, sea food, eggs, almonds, walnuts cucumbers, cauliflower, toatoes, celery, brussel sprouts, onions, turnips, bran and whole wheat.

FRESH AIR IMPORTANT

In addition to a proper diet, it is important to have an abundance of fresh air and sunshine. These are important in overcoming any form of nervous disorder. The rays of the run are healing. They help the body to relax and store up energy. Long walks are recommended and in some cases special forms of exercise are helpful. Your physician will outline the general and medical treatment you should have.

Do not permit yourself to become discouraged. It is true that complete recovery from any nervous disorder is slow work, but by proper care, restoration to good health will be your reward.

Younger Generation Is "Sure Slipping"

Sydney, N.S.—Mrs. Urban Sampson, of River Bourgeois, Cape Breton, celebrated here 101st birthday by showing a crowd of "youngsters" how to dance an old-fashioned "square set."

For four hours she held the centre of the floor in a regular old-time Cape Breton set of lancers and quit only when the crowd of young folks invited to her birthday celebration cried "enough".

"What's come over the young people of today?" she asked. "They can't take it. Seventy-five years ago we danced from nightfall until the following day break. A good breakfast and then we were at it again. The young generation is sure slipping."

Mrs. Sampson a venerable old lady of sturdy French-Canadian stock, is unmoved by the fact that she has passed another milestone in a second century. She has no special recipe for longevity. Still possessing a hearty appetite, she is enjoying life to the full, she declares. Relatives and friends visit her in large numbers and delight in hearing her relate tales of days long ago.

Mrs. Sampson has a 80-year-old son and had 51 great-grandchildren, of whom 41 are still living.

ONTARIO HYDRO BODY AIMS TO EXTEND RURAL LINES

Extension of rural Hydro lines at a rate of less than 500 miles a year is the aim of the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario, Chairman T. Stewart Lyon announced recently during an address that featured a service commemorating the birth date of the late Sir Adam Beck.

He said the Commission hopes to make a reduction in service charges that will "materially lessen the general and justifiable objection to the present service charge in rural Ontario."

Within the last nine months 406 miles of Hydro lines have been authorized to serve 2,772 customers and 320 miles have been actually put into operation.

"I think it is quite possible that within 20 years the farm consumers of electrical energy will have increased to 120,000, or practically two-thirds of all the farms in the province. This will mean an average addition to the number of existing customers of almost 5,000 yearly, not an impossible growth."

JOY IN LIVING

"There is a joy in living,
A joy in the very being;
An ecstacy in giving,
A life of gifts in laughing.
A cheerfulness in smiling,
The smallest of a friendly glance,
Will make the inward spirits dance
The day will seem less dreary,
The way will be less weary.
But never, never a sad song;
So sing a bit of a glad song,
And cheer the road for others
As you travel on your way."

NEW CASH CROP FOR FARMERS

(Cornwall Freeholder-Standard)

It is estimated farmers of Eastern Ontario could benefit to the extent of approximately $200,000 per year by growing poplar trees to be used as wood for pulp and paper making. Scientists have been working on the problem of wood for pulp making purposes for some time and it seems likely that within a few years farmers will be using what would otherwise be waste land for the growing of wood for pulp.

An article in a recent issue of The Scientific American by R. G. Skerrett tells of the advances which have been made in this direction. The article says:

"After 18 years of research in cross-breeding poplars to find a new source of wood for papermaking, Dr. Ralph H. McKee of Columbia University and his associates have announced hybrids that can profitably be cut at the end of eight or ten years and that grow 10 to 14 times as fast as the wild poplars now used in large quantities. Experimental groves of the new hybrids are flourishing in Maine, New York, Florida, Wisconsin and North Carolina (though stocks are not yet available for commercial distribution). "Our calculations," Dr. McKee says, "make it reasonably certain that more dollars per acre-year of wood can be grown than can be realized per acre-year in wheat or other farm crops." In a country where the per capita consumption of paper is close to 225 pounds annually, paper mills have stripped nearby sources of pulp wood, and dependence on foreign sources is growing at a disquieting rate. The McKee poplars may be planted on unpromising or waste land and in areas where they will greatly help to arrest soil erosion."

The information in the article is of interest to almost every farmer in this district. With pulp and paper mills at Ottawa, Hawkesbury and Cornwall, and with means of transportation and road systems in increasing numbers, this is a matter which may well be considered seriously by the farmers themselves, and by the Departments of Agriculture of Province and Dominion. The most desirable feature of the proposal is that the pulp producing trees can be grown on land which would otherwise be waste land.

If the trees will grow insufficiently in ten years to produce a crop of pulp wood then every farmer sixty years old and under should commence at once to plant a section of trees every year. In ten years' time, he would be harvesting the fruits of his labor. Once planted, the trees require little attention until they are ready for cutting. That these trees have been grown successfully in New York State and in Maine, means that they are almost certain to thrive in Eastern Ontario.

Howard Smith Paper Mills Cornwall Division has quite a large plot of land immediately to the east of their mill set out in poplars, as a test plot, to demonstrate what can be done in this direction. The plan to plant poplars is one which should be investigated and acted upon at once, especially in Eastern Ontario.

GOAT ATTENDS CHURCH

Flesherton has a goat with an urge to attend church. Last Sunday while the Presbyterian service in the Baptist church was in progress the worshippers were surprised to behold the church door swing open. It was a late-comer they conjectured. Their surprise turned to astonishment when they beheld a rugged goat enter. The newcomer stood for a moment calmly surveying the minister and congregation. Then he moved slowly and sedately up the aisle to the very front seat. As a hymn was being sung the goat was gently but firmly ejected, and the service continued.—Flesherton Advance.

WAR PROFITEERING

That war is indeed profitable for some people was revealed at the recent investigation by the United States Senate Committee. It is almost impossible to conceive what fabulous fortunes have been made out of governments and consumers while soldiers received $1.10 and lived in squalid wretchedness in the trenches or on the field and the nation put itself on rations that the bills of the profiteers might be paid. The meat packers in the four years of war made profits of $140,000,000, the steel companies made $515,000,000 in one year (1918); in 1919 the Bethlehem Loading Company made 350 per cent.; from 1917 to 1918 nearly fifty people rose to incomes of over a million dollars a year. It is this class in all countries that is stirring up the enmities and passions that lead to war.

With relief so easy to get these days no one has any fears about going to the poorhouse.

THE FALL FAIRS

The arrival of the fall fairs brings home to us the benefits to be derived from such enterprises on the part of any community. Not only are "fair days" looked forward to as a time when neighbours and friends gather together for a social time but much of an educational and practical value are to be gained from such displays of exhibits and produce.

The time was when Winchester sponsored one of the best fairs in Eastern Ontario. Exhibits were plentiful and a profitable time enjoyed by all who attended. Such is not now the case and it is to be regretted. Meanwhile, the neighbouring villages of Metcalfe and Russell make plans for their exhibitions. For 79 years the Metcalfe Agricultural Society has been functioning in the interests of that district, until the Metcalfe Fair has come to be recognized as one of the best rural exhibitions in the province. Displays are numerous and the competition exceedingly keen, due to the untiring efforts of the various committees in charge of the various features. The same things may be said of the Russell Society.

Both of these communities are much smaller in population than Winchester and it is difficult to understand why this place should be unable to carry on a flourishing Agricultural Society and fall fair. One of the most essential factors is to have an energetic and enterprising executive at the head, and it would seem that both Metcalfe and Russell are fortunate in this respect.

It is to be hoped that Winchester will eventually rouse itself from the placid state into which is has fallen with respect to a fall fair and by obtaining the same co-operation from the citizens that was given the Old Home Reunion, put the enterprise over with a bang.

POLITICS

Now that the date of the Federal election has been announced, it is to be expected that we shall have a considerable barrage of oratory, from all parties, during the next eight weeks.

Rt. Hon. Mackenzie King released a broadside during the past week when he announced the fourteen planks in his political platform. A perusal of the various planks is enlightening to say the least, and in some cases, refreshing. Section 98 of the Criminal Code will go by the boards if Mr. King gets into the driver's seat. The newly-formed Bank of Canada, which, incidentally, has not been in existence long enough for anyone, including Mr. King, to tell how well or how poorly it is functioning, will be made a national bank, publicly owned. The Canadian National Railways is to be kept as a public, rather than a privately-owned burden on the people, and numerous other points, which all go towards making elections what they are.

On the other hand, Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett and his cohorts are raising their verbal bulwarks and endeavourinng to hold the fort. During the past week Mr. Bennett has rejuvenated his somewhat battered Cabinet and completed the work of "plugging the Senate," so that all is now in order for the election day.

In the meantime, Hon. H. H. Stevens devotes his time to stirring the infant Reconstruction Party into wakefulness, and explaining to large audiences, how he came to sever connections with the Conservative party.

As to the outcome of it all, the political horizon is somewhat foggy. The next eight weeks, however, have all the earmarks of being interesting days, with the rudely-awakened Canadian people acting in the capacity of judge of play.

THE TERRIBLE TOLL

The past week-end witnessed a shocking number of fatalities at summer resorts and on the public highways. In Ontario alone, 11 persons met death by drowning while no less than 6 persons were killed in level crossing accidents.

It seems to be impossible to convince many drivers that railway crossings are among the most dangerous hazards on the public highways today. During the past two weeks seven were killed on a crossing near Montreal, one at Deschenes near Ottawa, two at Hamilton, and on Sunday a young man near Whitby met death on a level crossing, when struck by a fast express.

The careless abandon with which some motorists approach railway tracks would, at times, warrant a charge of reckless driving, and it is a pity that our highway traffic officers are not given the authority to arrest all drivers who fail to come to a full stop, as they are in the province of Quebec.

A driver should always keep in mind that he is under an obligation to those who are riding with him in the vehicle; that he is responsible for the lives of the passengers, and carelessness means the endangering of lives other than his own.

It is high time that the authorities co-operate with the railways, who have certainly done their part with all sorts of warning signs and signals, to see that the terrible toll at railway crossings is reduced to the minimum.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The untimely death of Will Rogers, noted humourist, and Wiley Post, famous flier, in a crash at Point Barrow, Alaska, on Friday last, occasioned deep regret throughout the world.

The homely philosophy and keen humour of Will Rogers had made him the idol of the American people. In time his influence spread into Canada through the medium of the radio and the talking pictures where his tragic death is deeply mourned.

We are heartily in accord with the words of a prominent United States senator who said: "Will Rogers has been a mighty influence in this country throughout the depression. His serious business of lightening people's cares through his remarkable personality and wit, made him one of the outstanding Americans of this age. His untimely passing is an inestimable loss to this country and to the world."

The tragic passing of Wiley Post, world-girdling flier, is a serious blow to aviation in which circles he was recognized as one of the world's leading aces.

The departmental examination results of the local High School have now been published, and we might say that they compare very favourably with the average throughout the province.

This community may justly be proud of its educational facilities and the competence of the members of the teaching staffs. We are living in an age when every child must be equipped mentally in order to succeed, and it is the duty of the parents as well as the children themselves to see that they take full advantage of their opportunities.

With the opening of school only two weeks off, we offer our congratulations to those who were successful in their work of the past year and add a word to those who failed: September 3 is the day to commence preparations for the exams next June. Take advantage of the opportunities offered to obtain an education. It may mean the difference between success and failure in life.

The "On-to-Ottawa" trekkers made the announcement on Monday that, "After a complete analysis of the situation and fully understanding the great victories we have achieved," they had decided to seek transportation back to their respective homes.

It may be that the trekkers have achieved great victories, but in our humble judgment, a liberal dose of sunburn and numerous pairs of sore feet were the chief items obtained through the trek.

The inventor of the famous slogan "Stop, Look, Listen," lost his life in a car crash a few days ago. Is it possible he failed to follow his own preaching? There have been many cases of such people falling into the trap they spent their life-time warning others against.—Almonte Gazette.

DEATH OF MISS WEAGANT

Grand-daughter of the Rev. J. B. Weagant, first Church of England missionary in Dundas county, Miss Anne E. Weagant passed away in Ottawa last week at the age of 90 years. She was born near Morrisburg and in early life served as an Anglican missionary to the Indians of the north-western United States. After returning to Ottawa she served as a governess for many years. She was the last surviving member of her family. Interment took place at Morrisburg.

FRY BACON AND EGGS ON STEPS OF CITY HALL

As Toronto citizens sweltered in the heat on Tuesday, an egg and two rashers of bacon sizzled on the steps of the city hall, close to the mayor's office.

Broken upon the steps by a female civic employee, the yolk of the egg held firm, but the white curled slowly about the strips of bacon, already exuding tiny trickles of hot grease. The "meal" was declared fried in about five minutes, but none of the passersby who had stopped to see the "show" could be persuaded to sample it.

COMSTOCK—GUTSCH

A wedding of much locaal interest took place at Covenant Presbyterian church, Detroit, Mich., on Saturday evening at 7.45 o'clock, when Dorothy Norma, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William G. Gutsch was united in marriage to Mr. Cecil E. Comstock, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Comstock, of Senton, Mich. Rev. Dr. Walter McClure, pastor of the church, officiated. The wedding nook where the ceremony was performed was beautifully decorated with a banking of ferns and palms interspersed with pillars of pastel colored gladioli.

The wedding party entered the church to the strains of Lohengrin's Wedding March, played by Mrs. N. Bailey, who presided at the organ throughout the ceremony.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride looked charming in a Princess gown of white satin, made with long train, Queen Anne collar trimmed with white Chantilly lace and long close-fitting sleeves. Her double veil of Tulle was fastened to a shirred tulle cap, trimmed with braided tulle and orange blossoms. The shoulder veil, which was fashioned from the bride's mother's veil was edged with rare old Chantilly lace. She carried a bouquet of ivory roses, baby's breath and ferns, arranged in shower.

Miss Alice Larsen, maid of honour, wore a gown of hyacinth blue satin and matching Jackely accessories, pink felt hat and pink slippers. Her bouquet was made up of pink Killarney Roses and blue delphiniums.

Miss Marguerite Otter, bridesmaid, wore a gown of pink hyacinth satin, with blue felt hat and slippers. Her bouquet was similar to that of the maid of honour's.

The Misses Rosalie Otter and June Tandell of Superior, Wisc., acted as junior bridesmaids. They wore gowns of baby blue satin, trimmed with white net over pink silk, and carried nosegays of pink roses and pink and blue delphiniums.

Mrs. Gutsch, mother of the bride, wore a gown of light blue crepe, trimmed with Chantilly lace. A corsage bouquet of white gladioli and pink roses and large pictured hat completed her outfit.

Mrs. Comstock, mother of the groom, was gowned in white embroidered voile. Her bouquet consisted of jacked pink roses.

The groom was supported by Mr. Francis Comstock, who performed the duties of best man.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, at which over 100 guests were present. Later Mr. and Mrs. Comstock left by motor on a trip through Eastern Ontario and Quebec. On their return they will reside at Detroit, Mich.

The bride is well-known here, having spent the summer months for the past fifteen years with friends and relatives in this district.

UNION SERVICES

The last of the Summer Union services between the United Church and St. Paul's were held last Sunday in the latter Church with Rev. W. D. Turner in charge. In the morning he gave a masterly address on faith, based upon the 11th chapter of Hebrews, especially Verse 6. The choir, under the leadership of the organist, Miss C. J. Irving, contributed an anthem.

At the evening service he read Numbers 22, and spoke from Verses 12, 20 and 22. He described Balaam as a strange character to whom God spoke, as He speaks to us through the conscience, and we also oppose Him through the will just as Balaam did. When he was asked to curse Israel he feared the consequences of disobedience to God, although he desired the rewards offered. The second delegation came with very flattering offers. Balaam bade them wait until morning when he hoped to receive from God a more favorable answer. This time God allowed him to go, to show him his mistake. The Lord's anger was kindled against him because of his desire to go against God's will. This is a common situation. The birth of sin is the sinful desire. We must surrender our wills to God and say: "not my will but Thine, O Lord, be done."

A HAPPY FAMILY

The father of "the happiest and perhaps the biggest family in Michigan" says that "for more than a quarter of a century there hasn't been a hand lifted in punishment nor a cross word spoken in our home."
That, too, seems to be something of a record for a mother, father and 19 children.
And yet, why should hands have to be lifted and cross words spoken among those who live under the same roof—and, for that matter, among those who live under different roofs?
Just one reason: A lack of tolerance
When people try to understand each other, when they look for the goods in others and overlook their foibles and inconsequential failings, when they live and let live, they find less cause to punish and scold.
And that is the beginning of happiness.

ROWENA RIDES THE RUMBLE

COPYRIGHT 1931 BY THE AUTHOR

by ETHEL HUESTON

FIRST INSTALMENT

The whole trouble lay with Peter.—Peter Blande.—He was the fly in the ointment, the blot on the escutcheon, the carbon knock in the motor. Things just couldn't possibly have worked out more to Rowena's fancy, except for the persistent presence of Peter. And there was absolutely no hope of getting rid of him—he was too deeply mixed up in everything.
To tell the truth, it was Peter's project in the first place. Rowena herself only got into it at the last minute in answer to an advertisement in the morning paper. It was Peter who put the ad in.
Peter was a commercial artist, one of those thrice unfortunates with a soul for art, a talent for paint and a need for more ready money. He spent his days painting trees, rocks and running brooks, dotted here and there with pretty girls, Algonquin anglers and Broadway golfers, as a background for the Rackruff Roadster, 1931 model, comprising fully half the picture.
It was Peter who conceived the exquisite idea of a Rackruff motor tour across country with the well-known artist, Peter Blande, at the wheel. He figured—and converted Mr. Rack, President, and Mr. Ruff, Secretary and Treasurer, to his figures—that it would be the pinnacle of publicity to conduct such a tour, with pauses at all points of prime interest for him to paint a picture of the Rackruff roadster poised on the brink of a precipice, pulling its way pluckily out of a volcano, skidding securely off a racing glacier, or defying the sands of the desert.
Peter said—and Messrs. Rack and Ruff agreed with him—it would be good business to take a copy-writer along in the car to feature the high lights of the trip and apply the proper adjectives both to landscape and motor, in this way insuring a maximum of newspaper publicity that would establish the new roadster once and for all in the motor mind of America.
So Peter advertised for a copy-writer.
"Wanted:" read the advertisement in the morning papers. "A pretty woman who can write. One who has had some experience and met with reasonable success. Must be free to leave the city. Expenses paid and moderate salary. Must be good-looking. Apply Rackruff Salesrooms to-day."
Rowena Rostand was one of many women who read the advertisement over her breakfast that morning. It wasn't much of a breakfast in Rowena's case, for she was extremely hard up. She had given up a newspaper position in Ohio in order to be in New York.
It was at eight-thirty that she saw the advertisement. By nine o'clock she was ready to set out for the Rackruff salesrooms. Surveying herself in the mirror she was obliged to admit fairly that in spite of the little thinning of her face, in spite of the dark circles with which anxiety had shadowed her eyes, she was still undeniably good-looking.
Her black and white ensemble was freshly sponged and pressed—Rowena herself had seen to that—her ruffled white blouse was smart in spite of the worn spots here and there. Her black and white shoes were spotless, the fingers of her gloves neatly mended. The collar of her silk coat shone from countless pressings.
"Pick out the best-looking one," Mr. Rack began when the secretary announced the applicants were outside.
"Don't you think," interposed Peter neatly, in his mild, ingratiating drawl, "that you had better look them over yourself? After all, nobody can visualize a lovely face and figure behind the wheel of a Rackruff roadster as you can, you know."
Mr. Rack thought that was a particularly good idea. He called in Mr. Ruff to assist, allowing Peter also to sit by, and had the secretary usher them in, one at a time. And he and Mr. Ruff frowned over them, and asked about their literary efforts, and noticed their eyes and ankles and complexions, jotting down indecipherable comments on their memorandum pads.
The secretary, having some notion of dramatic sequence, saved Rowena for the last. Rowena was so lovely that at first they would not believe she was a writer at all, and she had to show them a copy of her book and some of her signed stories in magazines. Rowena's hair was a curious chameleon shimmer of gold and bronze and brown. Her eyes were limpid pools of light that swam now blue, now green, and in gentle moments softened to hazel.
"I'm Rowena Rostand," she said, looking at them straightforwardly. "I am twenty-five years old. I have had one book published and it was so good that practically nobody read it. I worked on a newspaper for three years and I've had eleven stories published in first-class magazines. And you may not think I'm so very good-looking, but lots of people do."
Rackruff Motors, Inc., in the persons of Messrs. Rack and Ruff, thought so, too. Even Peter nodded his approval.
And so Rackruff Motors, Inc., bound itself by written agreement to finance a motor tour for a party consisting solely of a beautiful young writer twenty-five years old and a commercial artist of thirty years and the opposite sex.
Rowena and Peter were called in for a conference early the next morning, and Mr. Rack, ably seconded by Mr. Ruff, put it up to them squarely. Somebody had blundered, everybody had blundered, if it came to that. An insurmountable difficulty had been encountered.

"I'm Rowena Rostand," she told them

"There are no insurmountable difficulties," Rowena said sweetly.
The whole enterprise was deadlocked, plans were checkmated, contracts were canceled. The way Mr. Rack put it, with the full accord of Mr. Ruff, it seemed pretty hopeless. Peter quite wilted under the deadly finality of it all.
"Unless," he suggested tentatively, "we advertise again and get an older author, maybe a married one—I suppose a little less good-looking would be better under the circumstances—would attract less attention."
"But you signed me," protested Rowena quickly. "If you try to put any one else in my place, I'll get out an injunction and tie up everything."
Rowena's eyes at that moment were a clear, cold, business blue. Not one of them doubted for a moment that she would do just as she threatened.
Mr. Rack threw out his hands despairingly. "Well, it's off, that's all," he declared.
And Mr. Ruff nodded his head.
Peter seemed cowed into acquiescence. But Rowena was never one to be cowed into acquiescence. She laughed brightly.
"Why, my dears," she said, "it doesn't make the least bit of difference. This is a business trip. I am a professional writer. Mr. Blande is a professional artist. We are thrown together in a purely business capacity, and our ages and sexes have nothing whatsoever to do with it. Nobody thinks anything of a man spending eight hours a day locked into four walls with his stenographer. Certainly an author and an artist riding the public highways in an open car are far safer."
Unfortunately for Rowena, however, Messrs. Rack and Ruff continued to object. Even Peter did. They made all due allowance for Rowena's purity of purpose and nobility of nature, but Rackruff Motors, Inc., said Mr. Rack, stood firm for the conventions.
"Of course, if you feel like that," Rowena said cheerfully, "Mr. Blande and I will be guided entirely by your wishes. We will have to get a chaperon; that's all."
"We wouldn't care about paying the expenses of a third party," said Mr. Ruff quickly.—Mr. Ruff was Treasurer of the Company.
"It will not be necessary," said Rowena. "We will take a lady with us who will be glad to make the tour for her transportation, paying her own living expenses en route."
"Can you find such a person?" asked Mr. Rack.
"Certainly," said Rowena brightly. "Leave everything to me."
"What are you going to do?" asked Peter.
"The same thing you did. Advertise!"
So they went down the street to the nearest Childs' and figured out an advertisement that seemed to suit their purpose.
"Wanted: Young woman to serve as companion on extensive motor tour of the United States. Transportation provided, but must pay own living expenses."
Peter wanted to put in something about a pleasant disposition being an asset, but Rowena said it would be useless—said all women thought they had good dispositions.
"You advertised for a good-looking author, didn't you? And did you see the mob that answered?—We'll have to trust her disposition to luck. Besides, she'll be in the rumble seat—we won't see much of her."
They received a great many answers to the advertisement and Peter went down to her snug, one-room apartment to assist in making the selection. This proved not difficult.
The letter chosen was written on plain creamy paper of very fine quality.
"I am twenty-three years old, a college graduate, and can pay my own expenses unless you plan to travel on a very deluxe scale. I can start at any time and stay as long as you like. The only thing I am really interested in is to go—and go at once. I enclose references."
The name was Roberta Lowell.
The references were good so Rowena got the number on the telephone, with Peter standing interestedly by, and talked to Roberta Lowell.
"She has a nice voice," she whispered to Peter.
Miss Lowell said she could start on Monday morning, that she could get all of her traveling equipment in one suitcase and a small traveling bag, and that she had an allowance of twenty-five dollars a week.
"Wait a minute." Rowena put her hand over the transmitter. "She can spend twenty-five a week," she said to Peter.
"Well, that ought to be enough," said Peter. "Except for the car, I'm hoping to get along on less."
Miss Lowell said she would meet them, bag and baggage, at the Rackruff show-room at ten o'clock Monday morning without fail, and she thought it was going to be great fun.
"Oh, by the way, Miss Lowell——"
"Oh, please don't call me Miss Lowell. Call me Bobby. Everybody calls me Bobby. Miss Lowell is so stiff."
"Well, by the way, Bobby Lowell," went on Rowena, "you'll have to ride in the rumble seat."
"I don't care," was the brave retort, "I'll be willing to ride a cowcatcher to get out of New York and get out quick."
Now Rowena did not like artists. She said they were so abstract. Rowena herself was extremely concrete. She felt, in her heart of hearts, that it was a shame that such a heavenly opportunity to go places, see things, meet people—and best of all, make money doing it!—had to be all messed up with an artist like Peter. Even Rowena, however, could see that she couldn't very well get rid of him—not under the circumstances. If only she and the Roberta girl could go alone now—ah, there would be a travel tale worth the telling. And how they would photograph, the two of them, in the snappy 1931 Rackruff roadster! The publicity they would get!
Mindful that there would be photographers to record their departure from the Rackruff Salesrooms—the Publicity Department was taking care of all that!—Rowena took extreme pains with her appearance that Monday morning, and that was an unusual thing with Rowena.
When she presented herself at the Rackruff show-room at ten o'clock on Monday morning, Messrs. Rack and Ruff had good reason to congratulate themselves on their choice of author. Photographers and reporters were alike enchanted. A girl like that, now, swinging along the Rocky Mountains in a Rackruff roadster—ah, there was publicity made to your order. And it was all Peter's idea, too.

RESUSCITATION

Every Canadian Should Learn Shaeffer Method.

In view of the continued drownings throughout the province, the Canadian Red Cross Society has stressed the importance of holiday-goers familiarizing themselves with methods of resusciation.

The most recognized resuscitation method to-day and which the Red Cross has demonstrated to some 2,-500 students in Toronto schools and institutes is that known as the Shaeffer or Prone Method, an outline of which is given below.

Efforts at resuscitation should be continued until signs of life reappear or vigor mortis sets in, officials of the Red Cross stated, and these efforts should be persisted in for four hours or more if necessary.

The method which has proved invaluable in saving lives that might otherwise have been drowned is as follows:

1. Lay the patient face downwards, with one arm extended directly overhead, the other arm bent at the elbow and the face resting on hand or forearm, so that the nose and mouth are free for breathing.

2. Kneel over the patient, straddling his hips. Place the palms of the hands on the small of the back with fingers resting on the ribs, the little finger just touching the lowest rib, the thumb alongside of the fingers just out of sight.

3. With arms held straigth, swing forward slowly so that the weight of your body is gradually brought to bear upon the patient. The lower part of the chest and also the abdomen are thus compressed, the air is forced out of the lungs, the diaphragm is kept in natural motion, and the circulation of the blood increased.

4. Now immediately swing backward so as to completely remove the pressure, thus returning to the original position. The chest walls expand and the pressure being removed, the diaphragm descends and the lungs are supplied with fresh air.

5. After two seconds swing forward again. Then repeat twelve to fifteen times a minute the double movement of compression and release. If a watch or clock is not visible, follow the natural rate of your own breathing. The proper rate may be determined by counting — swinging forward with each expiration and backward with each inspiration.

6. While this is being done, someone else should loosen any tight clothing about the patient's neck, chest or waist. Try to keep the patient warm by having someone cover him with a blanket and by placing hot water bottles near his body, but outside the blanket to prevent burning him.

7. Continue this artificial respiration without interruption until natural breathing is restored; if necessary for four hours.

8. When the patient revives, he should be kept lyng down. Give him a drink of hot ginger, tea or coffee, or half a teaspoonful of spirits of ammonia in a glass of hot water. Always send for a doctor.

9. Watch the patient until the doctor comes, and if normal breathing stops, artificial respiration should be started again at once.

MARKETING SCHEMES

HONEY

The Dominion Marketing Board has recently been given consideration to a scheme to regulate the marketing of honey produced in Ontario. The scheme has the sponsorship of "The Ontario Beekeepers' Association" and representatives have waited upon the Dominion Marketing Board to explain the marketing conditions which the scheme is intended to improve. The scheme is still subject to further review and amendment by the Dominion Marketing Board.

Copies of the proposed scheme are available on request from the Secretary of the Dominion Marketing Board at Ottawa. Those who wish to make representations with respect to the scheme may make them in writing or may make a request for a hearing before the Dominion Marketing Board. Any such written briefs or requests for appointments should be made to the Secretary of the Board before August 18th; those requesting appointments will later be notified of the exact date of hearings.

BURLEY TOBACCO

Burley tobacco growers of the province of Ontario have submitted to the Dominion Marketing Board a Burley Tobacco Marketing Scheme under which it is proposed to regulate the marketing of Burley tobacco grown in Ontario. The scheme has the sponsorship of the Essex Burley Growers' Association and the Kent Burley Growers' Association.

DO YOU KNOW YOUR SALT FACTS?

Can Be Used In A Hundred Ways On The Farm

Of all materials purchased for farm use, salt, properly applied, is the most consistent money maker and money saver. It is truer economy to buy a bag too much than one pound too little. The things that interest a practical farmer are such topics as lard, livestock, field crops, barns fertilizers, butter and cheese, meat and eggs. For all of these, salt has some definite, practical, money saving or money making use. In feeding of livestock, it has been shown by Dominion Government tests that the cost of salt, properly fed, is returned to the farmer 3 to 14 times over.

Because salt is so universally necessary, it often used a vehicle to carry other food necessities which nature fails to supply. This is the reason for such products as iodized stock salt and iodized table salt. There are large areas in Ontario and the Western Provinces where natural foods contain almost no iodine. Iodized stock salt, in block form or loose, should be given the farm stock. This simple step saves thousands of young pigs, calves, lambs and foals, for the farmers of Canada every year. Take no chances; if you suspect iodine deficiency, use "Windsor" Iodized Salt regularly. It means stronger, healthier, more productive livestock, in any case.

CHOOSING FARM SALT

Coarse salt is salt or large grain size; fine salt is salt of relatively small grain: that is all that the words "coarse" and "fine" imply. As applied to salt neither word has any reference to quality, purity, or price. "Coarse" does not mean "crude and cheap," nor does "fine" mean "refined and dear."

Coarse salt is made by the "open pan" evaporation of brine which uses heat less efficiently than the "closed pan" method employed to make fine salt and it is therefore more expensive to produce than fine salt.

Fine salt is purer and drier than coarse salt; it contains more actual salt per 100 pounds. Because it is in smaller grains it is more adaptable to mixing with feeds, for spreading on hay, etc. Fine salt is actually cheaper.

Coarse salt should be purchased only for such special uses as curing hides and for freezing mixtures. For those purposes specify coarse salt. For other farm needs specify fine salt.

SALT FACTS

A mixture of ice and salt, three parts ice to one part salt will give a temperature well below freezing, in which many dainty desserts may be readily frozen. Remember this on hot summer days. Use coarse salt for this purpose.

A top dresing of salt binds dirt roads and paths, making the mhard and smooth. It dampens and lays the dust, yet prevents excessive mudding in wet weather. Keeps dirt from being tracked into the home.

The cause of heat cramps and heat exhaustion is loss of salt through excesive perspiration. Salt in drinking water makes up the loss and prevents such conditions. At haying and harvest time give your work horses extra salt. They will work better.

Salt is a controlling factor in an animal's use of mineral substances, such as calcium, phosphorous, iodine and iron. No mineral supplement is complete without salt. Proper feeding of salt increases the value of mineral mixtures.

A handy salt chart, which can be hung for ready reference, can be obtained freen of charge by writing to Canadian Industries, Limited, (Salt Division) Windsor, Ontario. FOR COLLECTORS

"Indians of Canada," by Diamond Jenness, published by the National Museum of Canada ($2.00), beautifully printed and bound, is a book everyone who prides himself on his library should have. Many photos and illustrations throughout the four hundred pages lend interest and are highly instructive. The chapter on "The Eskimo" I found exceptionally informative as these people living in the far northern hinterlands have always fascinated me. An Eskimo Song, music and words, is reproduced on page 207. I found it a charming little melody.—M.M.

HAVE YOU HEARD

FOURTEEN ERRORS OF LIFE

To expect to set up our own standard of right and wrong and expect everybody to conform.

To try to measure the enjoyment of others by our own.

To expect uniformity of opinion in this world.

To look for judgment and experience in youth.

To endeavor to mould all dispositions alike.

Not to yield to unimportant trifles.

To look for perfection in our own actions.

To worry ourselves and others about what cannot be remedied.

Not to alleviate if we can all that needs alleviation.

Not to make allowances for the weaknesses of others.

To consider anything impossible that we cannot ourselves perform.

To believe only what our finite minds can grasp.

To live as if the moment, the time, the day were so important that it would live forever.

To estimate people by some outside quality, for it is that within which makes the man.

Owner's Son: Dad, all of our boarders got mad this afternoon and left. They said this place was advertised as one of the most magnificent resorts in the world but that was just a fake.

Summer Resort Owner: No wonder they said that. Young man, don't ever let me catch you wading across Bottomless Lake again.

Some people are now installing revolving doors in their homes so that they can go out the same time the bill collector comes in.

Wifey: John, there's a burglar in the silver and another in the pantry eating my pies, Get up and call for help.

Hubby (at window): Police! Doctor!

Youth: Am I the only man who ever kissed you?

Girl Friend: Why will every man ask a girl that same question?

It may be possible to obtain a reputation for being wise by simply keeping still and saying nothing, but there is one person that will not be fooled———yourself.

Joe: I never clash with my boss.

Man: No?

Joe: No; he goes his way, and I go his.

Heard of a man the other day who really enjoyed going to a dentist. He was henpecked and it gave him his only opportunity to get his mouth open.

Young Man: May I have the pleasure of the next dance?

Sweet Young Thing: You May. I know I won't get any pleasure out of it.

SHAVINGS

A postage stamp sticks to just one thing and succeeds.

Many a self-made man might be happier if he could blame the job on somebody else.

If you play with your money, how can you expect it to go to work?

In some cases the life of a very sick patient might be saved by showing him the biography that the minister expects to read at his funeral.

They used to beat the swords into plow-shares. But now they beat the plow-shares into niblicks.

The world contains an over supply of average men.

Generally the fellow who makes the most fuss about the way the election goes did not vote.

The fool thought requires just as much time as that which turns out to be a big idea.

Love is the sweetest story ever told until somebody pulls the trap door from under you.

HORSES DIE OF EPIDEMIC

Strange Disease Strikes Quick And Sure At Manitoba Equines — 75 Already Taken.

WINNIPEG—New supplies of serum were being rushed to Manitoba to combat an outbreak of disease which is killing horses in central and southwest sections of the province.

Provincial and Dominion authorities co-operated to fight the strange ailment.

The nature of the disease, which has taken a toll of at least 75 horses, was not definitely known, but it was believed to be encephalomyelitis, which attacks the brain and spinal columns of horses. The bite of a new type of mosquito was thought to transmit the minute virus.

Viscera of the dead animals has been sent to Ottawa for laboratory diagnosis.. In the meantime, local quarantine measures in the infected areas are being enforced.

At a meeting, at which preventive measures were discussed, Hon. D. G. McKenzie, Manitoba minister of agriculture, promised the co-operation of his department with the Dominion health of animals branch. Whatever measures may be ordered by federal authorities will be backed by the province.

Serum for combating the outbreak has been exhausted, and orders have been rushed for fresh supplies. The serum is difficult to obtain and is expensive, the three applications recommended by veterinaries costing $25 per horse.

The outbreak first appeared in southwestern Manitoba, rapidly spread north and northeastward. Provincial authorities have no accurate estimate of deaths, or the number of horses attacked. One report told of 126 deaths in one area. Reports of new outbreaks were received from Hartney, Elgin, Boissevain and Pearson.

EXPECT 3 MILLION IN A YEAR FROM AMUSEMENT TAX

Two Months' Revenue Amounts to $504,574 for Treasury of the Government.

Toronto.—Based on returns for the first two months' operation of the new Act, the Provincial Treasury will be enriched more than $3,-000,000 through the amusements tax in 12 months at the expense of theatre owners, sport organizations and patrons, according to statistics compiled by the Allied Sports and Amusement Association.

Taking Heavy Toll

This will be more than four times greater than the Amusements Tax revenue of $745,056 for the fiscal year of 1934 and 200 percent. greater than the tax total of $1,016,-793 collected in 1932 when the Government granted exemption on admissions of 25 cents and under.

"Amusements tax returns for the last two months plainly indicate how the people of moderate means and children are being badly hit by the new impost," declared W. M. Gladish, secretary of the association which is waging a campaign against the entertainment levy. "The chief changes in the new Amusements Tax Act were the wiping out of the exemption on low-priced admissions and a tax increase of 150 percent. on the 30-cent ticket, which was the lowest admision previously assessed. The tax revenue for July was five times greater than that for the same month one year ago. Therefore it is the ordinary man and his family who are shouldering the burden. The figures only emphasize the need for amusements tax modifications without delay."

"The one big blunder is in calling the English simple when they are subtle."—G. K. Chesterton.

Our Column

All roads will lead to Winchester next Wednesday—it will be the centre of one grand and glorious celebration.

There are three months—February, March and October—without public holidays. Someone should do something about this.

Don't forget to display your flags and other decorative material next Wednesday, the day of Winchester's Big Celebration. There is bound to be a large crowd in town and it is up to each and every citizen to do their part to make Winchester look like a place that is staging a celebration. Hang out your flags!

SOME HEAT WAVE

On Saturday and Sunday last the village of Chicoutimi, Que., experienced temperatures of 129 and 127 degrees respectively. Reports have it that the weather became somewhat cooler on Monday, the thermometers registering a mere 110 degrees.

A NEW STOP STREET

According to a sign erected by employees of the Department of Public Highways at the intersection of Main and St. Lawrence streets on Monday last, Main St. has been made a stop street to all traffic approaching from the west. The chief difficulty of such a move will be to enforce the ruling.

JAMES S. PARKER ILL

The latest report received at this office was to the effect that Mr. James S. Parker, of Kemptville, and formerly a well-known resident of Cass Bridge, is seriously ill in the Civic Hospital at Ottawa. Mr. Parker suffered a stroke last week and when he failed to show signs of recovery, he was removed to the hospital.

FENIAN VETERAN PASSES

The death occurred at Alsask, Sask., on Wednesday last of a former well-known resident of Oxford Township, in the person of James Harnett. He was the last survivor of the Burritt's Rapids Company of volunteers who were called out in the Fenian Raid of 1866. He was in his 82nd year. Mrs. W. H. Ross, of Kemptville is one of the surviving relatives.

Next Wednesday's program is a very elaborate one. There should be something of interest for everyone.

RE-BUILDING ARENA

Construction of a new-covered arena, replacing the $10,000 arena that was destroyed by fire on the morning of February 14, began work this week at Spencerville with 17 men, mostly local, employed, and is being built under contract. The same concrete foundation is being used, as was formerly used, and the new building will be practically the same type as the former arena built in 1929.

BARNS AND CROP LOST

Two large barns containing a large crop of hay, together with a pig pen, on the farm of Mrs. Catherine White, second concession, Matilda township, were destroyed by fire at noon Monday. The fire was believed to have been caused by spontaneous combustion. Spectators said the roofs were lifted off with the pressure of fire. Mr. Robertson, who lives not far away, works the farm on shares and also suffered considerable loss. The buildings were insured.

Meet me at the celebration in Winchester on Wednesday, August 28th.

SCHOLARSHIPS GRANTED

In addition to county scholarships of the value of $100 apiece granted to the Kemptville Agricultural School by George T. Fulford, M.L.A., Dr. M. W. Locke and H. F. McLean, Merrickville, Senator A. C. Hardy, of Brockville, has granted three scholarships at the same institution of the value of $100 apiece towards the expenses of agricultural students from Leeds County, the award to be made by the county agricultural representative, while T. J. Davison, manager of Avondale Farms, Limited, Brockville, has granted a fourth scholarship of $100 towards expenses of a student from Leeds county in the domestic science course the award to be made by the agricultural representative and Mr. Davison.

If you want to have some fun attend the celebration here on August 28th.

IROQUOIS MAN HELD

Clifford Fawcett, of Iroquois, was arrested Saturday night by Constable Gerald Coligan after he allegedly struck and injured a Morrisburg man and driven away from the scene, police reporting a chase of more than seven miles being necessary before he was apprehended. Fawcett was said by police to have turned on to Main street at Morrisburg from the Ottawa-Morrisburg highway and struck Alfred Smith, wrecking his bicycle and inflicting painful injuries on the man. Constable Coligan immediately commandeered an automobile driven by Don. Casselman, of Morrisburg, and followed, arresting Fawcett at his home in Iroquois.

HEALTH OFFICER'S GIFT TO CORNWALL

As a token of his appreciation for many years of kindly treatment in the city of his adoption, Dr. C. J. Hamilton, veteran Medical Officer of Health, on Monday presented Cornwall municipality with a formal badge of office for its chief Magistrates in the years to come. The presentation was made to Mayor W. A. Parisien at the regular meeting of the Council Dr. Hamilton placing the handsome silver chain, with a pendant silver crest of the city, about the Mayor's neck. It was the first time in Cornwall's 101 years as a municipality that the Chief Magistrate wore such a badge of office. Dr. Hamilton, having been a servant of the corporation for fifty-seven years, was the first Medical Officer of Health to be appointed in Ontario. He is a former Mayor of Cornwall and ex-member of Parliament of Stormont County.

The Ontario Department of Highways has erected prominent signs along Main St. west, warning motorists of the dangerous intersection at Main and St. Lawrence streets. IN MEMORIAM

In fond and loving memory of Donald Johnston, who died on August 27th, 1931.
Gone is the face we love so dear,
Silent is the voice we loved to hear,
Too far away for sight or speech,
But not too far for thoughts to reach,
Sweet to remember him who once was here,
And who though absent is just as dear.
