HENRY'S Shorthand School Ottawa, Ont.

THIS INSTITUTION offers a superior training and thereby ensures a more successful future. It leads all others—a fact fully established by more than 625 pupils who have left other business schools to come to it—and ranks among employers as "The School of Higher Efficiency."

It is not surprising then that business men, in advertising for stenographers, should definitely state "Graduates of Henry's School preferred."

Interesting Presentation By Morewood Ladies' Aid

On Wednesday last the Crusader's Mission Band of the Presbyterian Church, Morewood, held their annual Easter Tea and Money Shower. The hall and tables were tastefully decorated with Easter chickens, rabbits, potted plants and green and yellow streams. Tea was served from five to eight o'clock to a large number of people. It being the regular day for the meeting of the Ladies' Aid, the society met with the Band and spent the afternoon in quilting.

In the evening a good programme was given by the Mission Band assisted by others. At the close of the programme a very interesting feature took place

Mrs. James Moffat, who has been president of the Ladies' Aid for the past two years, was 73 years old on Wednesday. She was called to the platform where a three-storey birthday cake with 73 candles burning was placed before her.

An address was read by Mrs. A. Nimmo, and Mrs. Chesley Marcellus presented Mrs. Moffat, on behalf of the Aid, with a potted plant and hand bag. Mrs. Moffat, though taken by surprise, made a very suitable reply. She then cut the cake which was then sliced and passed by the Mission Band girls to those present.

Following is the address:

Dear Mrs. Moffat,—It has been a happy coincidence that your seventy-third birthday should fall on this, the regular date of our Ladies' Aid meeting. We therefore cannot allow the occasion to pass without tendering to you our very best wishes.

You feel, no doubt, that you have passed many milestones. We feel thankful that your home has always been among us.

For many years you have taken a great interest in the different activities of our church. In our Ladies' Aid you have made a most capable and energetic president. In our W. M. S. you are an esteemed Life Member and you have always assisted our Mission Band most willingly Your home has always been hospitably open to us at all times.

As a tangible token of our gratitude, we ask you to accept these gifts. They carry with them our very best wishes. As you journey down "the sunset way" of declining years, we hope you may be spared to spend many such anniversaries with us.

We pray that God may grant to you and to your immediate family, health and "the peace that passeth understanding.

Signed, Mrs. A .Smith, first vice-president; Mrs. T. E. Coulthart, 2nd vice-president; Mrs. A. Nimmo, secretary; Miss Lill Feeley, Treasurer.

BURGLARY AT FINCH.

During Sunday evening or early Monday morning the residence of Duncan Cameron, Finch, was entered by burglars. Valuables were stolen, and the loss was reported to Provincial Police at Cornwall who are investigating.

Suffers Broken Ankle.

Landing on some round iron as he jumped to the platform at the local C. P. R. freight sheds after loading freight on a wagon, Mr. Dan McKercher, local freight clerk, suffered a fracture of his right ankle. He was taken to his home and the injury treated by Dr. H. H. Casselman.

The accident was very painful and Mr. McKercher will not be able to resume his duties for some time.

Pretty Easter Wedding Solemnized at Morewood

At the home of the bride's parents, Morewood, a quiet Easter wedding was solemnized at 8.30 a.m., on Wednesday, April 19th, when Margaret Elutheria, youngest daughter of Mr and Mrs. Walter Coulthart became the bride of Harold E Swerdfeger, B. A., son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. N. Swerdfeger, of Morewood. Pink and white petunias and ferns formed a pretty background for the ceremony. Rev. G. H. Smith, pastor of Morewood United Church, officiated.

The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a becoming gown of moss blue ripple-sheen crêpe made on long fitted lines with puffed sleeves and matching accessories, and carried an arm bouquet of talisman roses and valley lillies. The bridesmaid, Miss Eva Swerdfeger, sister of the groom, wore a powder blue sand-crêpe gown and matching accessories and carried an arm bouquet of pink and white sweet peas. Mr. J. Archie Coulthart, North Bay, brother of the bride, attended the groom, and Mrs. G. H. Smith played Mendelssohn's Wedding March

For travelling, the bride wore a smart costume of blue grey and the groom's gift, a silver fox fur scarf.

Mr. and Mrs. Swerdfeger left for Toronto and other western points, and will reside in Chatham.

Spring Flowers the Theme of Wos. Institute Meeting

The Women's Institute meeting was well attended yesterday afternoon and a very interesting programme was given. The roll call was answered by a flower verse.

Mrs. Hewitt played an instrumental selection "The Dance of the Daffodils," and Miss Helen Moad gave a very instructive paper on "Choosing and Planting an Easy and Effective Perennial Border." A social half hour was spent, refreshments being served by Mrs. Senn, Mrs. P. Allison, Mrs. C. W. Casselman, Mrs. B. Gibbons and Mrs. D. McKercher.

LARGE CROWD AT EUCHRE

At the first euchre and dance after Lent held in St. Mary's Parish Hall on Friday evening, the prizes were won by Mrs. Geo. McMahon and Mr. W. J. Dumouchel. A large crowd was in attendance, 20 tables being filled, and after lunch dancing was enjoyed. The music was supplied by Mrs. M. Gillissie, Misses Frances McAvoy, Marjorie Lynch and Eva Gillissie, and Mr. Eugene MacMillan.

Epidemic Noted by League Of Boys Riding Bumpers

The Ontario Motor League's attention has been drawn to a dangerous practice of some school children that is said to be an epidemic at going to and from school. Boys climb on to the rear bumpers or bumperettes when cars and trucks stop at the stop signs or signal lights and ride on these precarious perches, knowing that cars or trucks will be regularly stopped at succeeding stop signs and red trafffic signal lights. Not infrequently boys are thown from these perches by the sway, sudden decelerations and accelerations of the vehicles and by bumps. Sometimes when so thrown they are injured simply by the contact with the pavement and sometimes by being thrown under the wheels of passing or following vehicles. More than one driver, to avoid collision with these boys, has had no option but to damage and in some instances wreck their cars and in so doing not only endanger their own lives and limbs, but those of other users of the streets. It is reported that the boys guilty of this dangerous practice are aware that it is frowned on by the police and so, when policemen are in evidence, the practice is conspicuous by its absence. Parents, school principals, teachers, as well as the police, should do all that they practically can to discourage the practice of "hooking on behind."

Ontario During Ice Age Described By Professor

The sites of Toronto, Hamilton, Rochester and other lakeside cities completely covered with water, was the picture given to the Royal Canadian Institute Saturday night by Professor A. P. Coleman.

Such a state existed comparatively recently, geologically speaking, a matter of some 8,000 years ago, Professor Coleman said. The waters were those of Lake Iroquois, forerunner, so to speak, of Lake Ontario. The shoreline of Lake Iroquois may be determined running more or less regularly around the present lake about ten miles inland, according to Professor Coleman.

"Three times the ice came down from the north,' the professor related, telling of the formation of Lake Iroquois. "And each time it covered all Canada with an ice layer that varied in height up to 12,000 feet. Each time it melted. These processes went on hundreds of thousands of years ago. When the last great invasion of ice was over and had melted, Lake Iroquois was formed—a lake whose precise outline is not known but which is generally believed to have been a slightly larger edition of Lake Ontario, with a big gulf down by Syracuse, New York and an outlet through New England, instead of the St. Lawrence. Where the St. Lawrence is now, there was, in the days of Lake Iroquois, a great wall of ice that covered all Quebec. Against this the waters beat in vain."

The contraction which brought the present shoreline into being, occurred 8,000 years ago at the dawn of civilization, according to Professor Coleman.

Bad Driving.

Scottish Newspaper.

There are many kinds of bad driving, and cutting-in is the commonest, the most severely reprobated by careful road-users and the most fruitful in fatal and costly accidents. But a case in the King's Bench, of an unusual, if not unique kind, in respect of the simplicity of the cause and the heaviness of the damage, followed upon neglect to give proper and timely warning of the intention to stop. A woman motorist in a car was being followed by a motor-cycle driven by a motor driver-salesman, whose wife was in the side-car. Possibly the woman motorist did not know that there was a motorcycle close behind her; but it was her business to know and to give proper warning before pulling up. In the opinion of the Court she had not done so, and as the collision injured the driver of the combination so severely that he cannot follow his usual employment, there was judgment in his favour for £2,590 of damages, and £105 for minor injuries sustained by his wife.

NEWS AND INFORMATION FOR THE BUSY FARMER

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture

The presence of a large proportion of broken or bruised kernels in seed grain seriously decreases its market value, and further loss is caused by the invasion of fungi after the seed is sown.

Fall wheat and clovers have wintered in good condition. This is the report from the majority of representatives although some districts afford notable exceptions. A greatly stimulated interest in pruning and spraying is observed among orchardists throughout Ontario.

O. A. C. Students on Trip.

A party of O. A. C. students have been guests of Thomas E. Wilson of the Wilson Packing Company, Chicago. These students are graduates of London Collegiate Institute and have received the Thos. E. Wilson Scholarship. Mr. Wilson for the past two years has offered these scholarships of $300 each to three graduates of London Collegiate Institutes and to boys who are from the farm and still interested in Agriculture. He is an old Ontario boy who still has a deep interest in the province.

Assistance For Dairy Business Is Planned by the Department

The Department will announce plans shortly whereby financial aid will be provided for the improvement of dairy herds.

The scheme is designed to assist every producer of milk, provided he is willing to purchase a high grade bull of known pedigree. This. it is felt, will help the dairyman and increase the present low yield of dairy cows in Ontario.

Spring Lamb Offerings Are Under Market Standard

Discussing the lamb situation, C. C. Lyster, Federal Government Market Representative. Union Stock Yards, said: "Lamb marketings made to catch the Easter trade were rather disappointing. Producers were either ill-advised, or not thoroughly acquainted with market conditions.

"Of shipments totalling some 500 head, more than 125 were returned to the farms as unsaleable, while half of the remainder were below market requirements for weight and finish.

"In these times it is essential that quality be the first consideration if prices are to be sustained, or advances merited."

The scrub bull campaign will be pressed again this year by the Live-stock Improvement Association of Elgin County. At the annual meeting in St. Thoams it was decided to organize sub-committees in each township to work personally among the owners of scrub bulls in the hope of reducing the 357 animals at present in use in Elgin.

Agriculture Is Major Factor In Canada's Export Trade

Agriculture, according to the Ontario Marketing Board, provides roughly one-half of Canada's export trade, the most important items being grain and grain products. cheese, live stock and live stock products, potatoes and apples.

Fruit Shipment to Great Britain.

The Ontario Fruit Growers' Association announce they shipped this year some 800 cars of apples. pears and plums to their European commercial representative. One hundred and thirty-five cars of plums and pears were exported to Great Britain.

This is the first attempt to ship these fruits from Ontario. The business will be extended this year .

Feeding Brooder Chickens.

As soon as the chicks are removed from the incubator to the brooder they may be fed. After seeing to it that the chicks are comfortable they should be given slightly warmed water to drink in the usual chick fountains. Chick-size grit should be placed before them in shallow pans, and hoppers of mash may then be put at their disposal. It is important that sufficient hopper and fountain space be provided so that all chicks may get sufficient food and water without crowding. Once the hoppers are put down they are not again removed as there is no danger of overfeeding.

Brooding feeds usually consist of the following essentials: chick scratch grain, mash, grit, shell, charcoal and green feed. For grain a commercial chick size mixture may be purchased and it is not usually fed for a week or ten days. The mash ordinarily will contain ground grains; mineral feeds such as bone meal; animal feeds, such as meat meal, fish meal, milk powder. etc., salt and cod liver oil. Unless the chicks have access to sunshine within the first week or ten days it will be wisdom to insist that cod liver oil be a component of the mash if a commercial product is fed.

Free Flowing Fertilizer.

An important point to be kept in mind when purchasing fertilizer is its condition or capability of uniform distribution. To bring this about some manufacturers are putting out their fertilizers in fine granular form. Within recent years the trend has been towards a higher concentration of the plant food constituents. The higher the concentration of the fertilizer. the more important it is that it should permit of an even distribution. In view of the practice of applying fertilizer by machine it is very desirable that the condition of the fertilizer should be free flowing, i.e., its condition should be such that stoppage or clogging of the material in the drill is not likely to occur.

Lime Subvention Policy Renewed.

According to a recent announcement made by the Hon. Thos. L. Kennedy, the Dominion and Provicial Governments in co-operation with the leading Railway Companies have renewed an agreement whereby the railways will carry ground limesone for agricultural purposes at a rate 25 per cent below the standard tariff and the Dominion and Provincial Governments through a subvention policy will still further reduce the cost of transportation by paying 50 per cent of the remaining freight up to a maximum subvention of $1.00 per ton.

If the standard rail tariff is $1.00 per ton, the railway reduces the rate 20c per ton; the subvention policy pays 40c and the farmer pays the remaining 40c.

Under the regulations, the minimum car is set at 30 tons. Limestone for agricultural purposes must be in a condition that 100 per cent will pass through a 10 mesh sieve, 50 per cent through a 40 mesh sieve, and 30 per cent through a 100 mesh sieve. Limestone must also contain a minmum of 80 per cent calcium carbonate or its equivalent in magnesium carbonate.

The maximum selling price is set at $3.00 per ton F. O. B. shipping point. The purchaser may place his order with any company in Canada but all limestone purchased under the subvention policy is subject to sampling and analysis.

Any farmer wishing to secure a car of limestone applies for a permit from the local Agricultural Representative. The original copy of the permit accompanies the order. and a copy is forwarded to Parliament Buildings, Toronto.

The lime company on receipt of an order ships the car and prepays the freight and in return forwards an account to Queen's Park for the amount of freight payable under subvention and collects the remaining amount of freight from the purchaser.

This policy Col. Kennedy states will result in a large saving to farmers needing lime, will increase yields and improve the quality of farm products on sour soils and will make limestone available at a reasonable price to all parts of Ontario.

Home Is Burned Near Finch.

The residence of James Park, an old landmark in this district, one mile north of Finch village, was destr yed by fire Friday evening, with a loss of $1,500. Mr. Park, who lived alone, had lighted a fire in the stove. Later the flames spread to nearby furnishings. Although a bucket brigade was quickly organized and many neighbours rushed to the scene, only a few articles from the ground floor were saved. A shed adjoining the frame house was also burned.

50 of Prescott's Unemployed Started Work Yesterday

Prescott, Ont., April 25. — The Canadoc, largest upper lake boat to navigate the St. Lawrence as far as Prescott, anchored above the town at seven o'clock this evening waiting for daylight to proceed in order to unload at the new Government elevator. The ship is carrying 215,000 bushels of wheat to be unloaded at Prescott. The boat is owned by the Patterson Steamship Lines and is the flagship of that fleet. More than 50 of Prescott's unemployed have received orders to start work unloading in the morning. On Thursday, the R. P. Durham, another large lake boat carrying 196,000 bushels of wheat, is due here.

Wm. Dain Dies in Watervleit Formerly of Morrisburg

Morrisburg, April 15.—Notice was received here to-day of the death of William Dain, 61, brother of John Dain, Morrisburg feed merchant, at his home in Watervliet, N.Y. Mr. Dain was a native of Morrisburg, having left here when a young man to live in the United States. Surviving him are his widow; one son, William, at Troy, N. Y.; one daughter, Mrs. Allan Murphy, and one grandson, Albert Murphy, also of Troy; two brothers, John, of Morrisburg, and Harry, of Dawesville, N. Y.; four sisters: Mrs. John W. Warren, of Toronto; Mrs. Homer Munselle, of New Hartford, N. Y.; Mrs. J. H. Owen, of Winfield, Kansas; and Mrs. J. H. Cole, of Wellington, Kansas.

Husband Held Responsible For Lingering Death of Wife

Montreal, April 23rd.—Accused by witnesses of having pushed his wife off the rear verandah of their home, and of refusing to call a physician to attend her after she had been seriously injured, William James Williams, 43, Saturday was held criminally responsibe by a coroner's jury for the death of Mrs. Annie Williams.

Williams' stepson, Frederick Dawson, 20, made the charges at the inquest into his mother's death. Dr. Rosario Fontaine, Quebec medico-legal expert, testified the woman's death was due to a fractured femur and to a long stay in bed without proper treatment. Mrs. Williams was found seriously injured in the backyard of her home early this month. She was lying unconscious in about three feet of snow when found by neighbours.

Dawson testified his stepfather was "always drunk," and struck his mother "until her face was black and blue." He had threatened her with a cane Continuous parental quarrels had forced him to leave home, Dawson said.

On the morning the accident happened, he was working outside Montreal, witness stated, and he was notified by long distance telephone. "I saw she was suffering terribly and asked why she had not called a doctor," Dawson testified. "She told me to remain quiet and not mention anything about a doctor. I finally decided to call one. Upon arrival my father met him at the door and told him he was too young and knew nothing about the profession. He then grasped him by both shoulders and threw him out."

For 17 days his mother was without medical assistance, Dawson continued. She was finally removed to hospital. "During her stay at home she confided in me the cause of her accident but forbade me to say anything to anyone," Dawson stated. "One day I asked her what happened. She told me to close the door and then she stated that my stepfather had pushed her off the rear gallery."

The total capacity per day of the flour mills of Canada during last year was nearly 112,000 barrels.

A large shipment of certified Canadian potato seed is being fully tested in the island of Cyprus in the Mediterranean to demonstate the merits of the Canadian stock.

Link With Former Days In Finch By Bank Anniversary

Earlier days in the history of Finch are recalled by the fact that this month marks the thirtieth anniversary of the establishment of the local branch of the Bank of Montreal in that village. The bank was first opened as a branch of the former Merchants Bank of Canada on April 9th, 1903, in a two-storey wooden building at the corner of Main and Church streets. Four years later, following a fire which destroyed the original structure, the bank erected its present office on the same site.

While to-day Finch is in the centre of one of the leading dairy sections of Eastern Ontario, a development which has been greatly fostered by the Dominion Government station established in 1912, at the time of the opening of the branch the district around the village was heavily wooded and lumbering was the principal industry. Since the branch was opened the population has more than doubled During this growth and development the bank has been, and continues to be, an important contributing factor.

D. A. McMillan was the first manager of the branch, and the present officer in charge is E. C. Gourlay.

Behind the Bank of Montreal as an institution there lies a history closely interwoven with that of the Dominion of Canada. In fact, its history began fifty years prior to Confederation. It was on the 23rd of June, 1817, that nine merchants of Montreal signed Articles of Association for the establishment of the "Montreal Bank." This action marked the foundation of the Bank of Montreal, which to-day holds the distinction of being by far the oldest institution of its kind in British North America, and one of the largest financial institutions in the British Empire. It also established the beginnings of the Canadian banking system.

To realize the conditions which prevailed when the Bank first brought organized financing to the relief of that early generation of Canadian business men, it is necessary to delve deeply into the history of the country.

The only organized portions of what is now the Dominion of Canada were the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada and the Maritime Provinces. Their whole population was less than 400,000, and that of Montreal, the chief trading centre, less than 20,000. The development of trade and agriculture was hampered by lack of facilities for exchange. The country was too poor to afford the luxury of a metallic circulating medium, and not only American, British and French, but also Portugese and Spanish coins were legal tender, and the ratios of exchange into colonial money of account were subject to frequent variations. As a consequence, domestic trade was carried on principally by barter, and international trade was on a very uncertain basis.

Such were the conditions when the Bank of Montreal began business on November 3rd, 1817, in modest rented premises, with a paid-up capital of $350,000. In a very short time this institution became the focal point of the business of the colony. It provided a medium of exchange such as had hitherto been lacking nursed along the early enterprises of the country, and straightened out the dificulties of inter-urban, interprovincial and international trading.

Everywhere as conditions have become ripe, the bank has planted its branches for facilitating the agricultural development of the country, its manufacturing industries, and its general commerce.

To-day the bank has over 550 branches distributed throughout Canada and Newfoundland, while its paid-up capital and reserves represent a total in excess of $75,000,000, and its assets amount to over $750,000,000. The value of the bank to the country, however, is not to be measured so much by the amount of its capital or by the size of its dividends, as by the security it has given to those who have trusted it, and facilities it has furnished for the exchange and the increase of commodities, and the assistance it has contributed to the development of the country.

The branches of the Bank of Montreal are situated alike in the large business centres and in residential districts, in agricultural communities and in mining camps. Everywhere in Canada it is a factor in the life of the community. To-day, nothwithstanding its influential connections, it is essentially a bank of the people, a bank where small accounts are welcome, a bank to which all classes can come with confidence in the security of deposits entrusted to its care, and with the assurance that every facility consistent with sound banking will be extended to those who seek its services.

Here and There

Another sale of salmon angling leases is announced in New Brunswick for the famous waters of the Upsalquitch River which will be leased to the highest bidder at a sale to be held in Fredericton, April 27. The leases will be for ten years from March 1, 1933.

Canadian railway salaries have experienced severe cuts over the past few years. This has applied to officers as well a. to workers on the trains and along the lines. The recently issued annual report of the C. P. R. announced that E. W. Beatty, Chairman and President of the C. P. R., had instituted a special cut of 15 per cent. for himself and the Company's directors. This makes a total cut of 25% for them since the decline in earnings began.

Nipigon River's famous speckled trout don't know it yet but the ukase has gone forth that non-residents shall pay only $5.50 for an annual fishing license, or about half the charge hitherto. Further, Nipigon guides will offer their services this year for $23.00 a week as against $28.00 in 1932. These trout in the Nipigon pools and in those off the islands at its mouth including St. Ignace, run to seven pounds and up.

Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Japan recently hung up a new speed record when she travelled the 2,329 miles from Honolulu to Victoria in four days, eight hours and three minutes, clipping seven hours, 47 minutes from her best previous time for the voyage and much outdistancing the best mark for any other Pacific liner except the Empress of Canada.

The literary hit of the year has been made by Frederic Niven, Canadian author, living near Nelson, B.C., whose "Mrs. Barry" has been recently hailed by authorities as one of the most profoundly moving books ever written. Mr. Niven, who thus breaks into the ranks of best sellers, earlier in the century handled baggage and freight for the Canadian Pacific Railway at Nelson.

H. F. Mathews, general manager, Canadian Pacific hotels in western Canada, with headquarters at Winnipeg, has been promoted general manager of the company's hotel system from coast to coast, with headquarters in Montreal, according to a recent announcement by E. W. Beatty, chairman and president of the railway.

It is necessary to go back to the year 1916 to find revenues of the Canadian railways on a level comparable with 1932. The following figures show that in 1932 as compared with 1916:

Railway Operating Revenues	Decreased	5.5%
Railway Operating Expenses	Increased	20.9%
Net Revenue from Railway Operations	Decreased	50.6%
Railway Tax Accruals	Increased	135.7%
Net Railway Operating Income	Decreased	58.3%
Railway Property Investment	Increased	34.6%
Rate of Return on Investment	Decreased	69.0%
Revenue Freight Ton Miles	Decreased	28.3%
Revenue Passenger Miles	Decreased	50.3%
Actual Gross Ton Miles	Decreased	17.2%
Payroll of Engine and Train Service Employees and Telegraphers	Increased	31.3%
Train Miles	Decreased	22.8%

The very particular housekeeper was having her bedroom redecorated. Wishing to learn what progress the painter was making in his work, she crept to the bottom of the stairs and listened. Not a sound reached her ears from inside the room.

"Painter," she called out, becoming suspicious, "are you working?"

"Yes, ma'am," came the reply.

"I can't hear you making a sound," she returned bitingly.

"Perhaps, not, ma'am," he shouted back. "I ain't puttin 'the paint on with no hammer."

There was a man that figured
That by going good and fast,
He could get across the R. R. track
Before the train got past.

He would beat the engine by an inch
And make the train crew sore . . .
There was a man that figured that,
But there isn't any more.

Not Worth It.

Dear Mac: Attended a press banquet out in Denver a few weeks back and old "Denver" Joe McGannon was mastro presiding and just before announcing me to the boys he told the following story: "A man with five dollars in his pocket that he felt like spending, or should I say wasting, visited a doctor and after a thorough examination asked the doctor if he thought he would live until he was ninety.

"The doctor asked him how old he was, to which the sucker replied, forty. Then the old quack asked him if he drank, gambled, smoked, or if he had any vices of any kind. The patient patient then informed the M. D. that he did not smoke, he never gambled, he loathed drinking; in fact, he didn't have any vices.

"Then, accoring to Joe, the doctor said, 'Wotinell do you want to live another fifty years for?"

—Doc Copeland.

Fire Extinguished at Berwick Early Yesterday Morning

On Wednesday morning at three o'clock the citizens of Berwick were aroused by the alarm of fire when the home of Mr. Joseph Meilleur, who now lives in Cornwall, but which was occupied by Mrs. Geo. Barriger and son when flames were discovered on the outside of the house near the wood shed and were burning their way into the home. Willing hands were soon busy and the flames were soon extinguished. Luckily the fire was seen in time as there was a strong north west wind blowing. Mrs. Barriger and son were in the States and there had been no fire in their home for some days. The cause is unkown, unless a passerby threw a cigarette butt as there was a dance in the Community Hall that evening and many people were moving about.

SUNDAY WAS ST GEORGE'S DAY

Sunday, April 23rd, was St. George's Day, and was observed by loyal Britons throughout the Empire. No special mark was made of the day locally, but in the larger centres special services and banquets were held during the week end. Rev Mr. Davies, in his address at Holy Trinity Sunday evening, referred to the anniversary of England's patron saint and read some eulogizing quotations.

Encouragement Is Found In Prorogation Speech

A NOTE of encouragement and optimism was sounded by Hon. Herbert A. Bruce, Lieutenant-Governor, in delivering the prorogation address from the Throne during the closing ceremonies of the fourth session of the 18th Legislature. The ceremony was carried out with the usual military display and the vice-regal salute of fifteen guns, accompanying British parliamentary procedure, while the floor of the assembly and the galleries were nearly crowded.

"It is encouraging to observe certain signs of improvement in the commercial outlook," stated Hon. Dr. Bruce. "Agriculture is in a better position generally speaking than it was a year ago, by reason of the diminished surplus of products carried over, the upward trend of commodity values and the success that has attended the activities of the marketing board. The continued expansion of the gold mining industry is a very helpful factor in promoting the revival of business."

Continuing, Dr. Bruce stated: "While the gradual reduction of unemployment is looked for, it has been considered advisable to give statutory form and authority to the plans and methods employed in dealing with the present situation. Your legislation respecting unemployment relief authorizes the province to enter into agreements with the Dominion and with the municipalities for providing employment and direct relief. Debentures may be issued by a municipality for such municipality's share of this expenditure."

Referring to the reduction in the size of the legislature, to be reduced from 112 to 90 seats, His Honour observed this move with interest, adding: "It is satisfactory to know that saving for differences of opinion as to details, there has been general agreement as to the wisdom of this legislation and co-operation in bringing it about."

Vindication of the Government's stand on Hydro was expressed when His Honour pointed out that it was a source of justifiable pride to the people of the province that the untarnished record of the Hydro Electric Commission has been sustained after many and searching investigations and more particularly by the judicial inquiry recently reported upon.

"The declaration that the work and dealings of the Commission have been conducted in every respect on the highest possible principles, and with great skill and rectitude is a vindication of the public confidence long enjoyed by the Commission," stated His Honour.

Dealing with the purchase of the Abitibi canyon power development project, His Honor stated that this acquisition meant to mining and other industries in Northern Ontario a new era of progress and development. The investment in the undertaking, by the government, is a practical demonstration of the faith of the province in the future of Northern Ontario, and that there is every reason to expect that the earnest efforts of the Commission to utilize the power resources of the province will be successful and will inure to the general advantage."

The prorogation address continued: "Your legislation for the relief of mortgagors and purchasers will serve to reduce present hardships and anxieties of home owners, both on the farm and in centres of population and to encourage co-operation between the interests concerned to their mutual advantage and security. Amendments to the election law will reduce the time required for the holding of an election and will provide more speedy and better methods for the preparation of the Voters' Lists. A measure of protection has been afforded the public by the enactment of the Collection Agencies Act, the purpose of which is to bring all collection agencies under regulation and control. The duty of administering this law has been confided to the Ontario Securities Commission which will license agencies and enforce the required safeguards.

"No more important matter has engaged your attention than the finances of the province," His Honour proceeded. "The reduction of the general expenditures and the curtailment of grants and emoluments will go a long way toward meeting the unusual demands upon the provincial resources and maintaining the sound financial position of Ontario. A measure of relief has been extended to the counties by the school law amendments in respect to the cost of secondary education and to the townships in respect to the grants to elementary schools. It has been provided also that school boards shall present municipal councils with full details of their financial condition when asking for the collection of school rates. Still further economy has been effected by conferring power to close schools having less than eight pupils in attendance while making provision for their education elsewhere."

Amendments in the interests of safety have been passed to the Highway Traffic Act, providing that drivers of automobiles will hereafter be required to slow down to a maximum of twenty miles an hour at all level railway crossings. The rule governing left hand turns has been clarified to conform with the prevailing practice. Street cars must come to a full stop before entering or crossing a through highway.

By conferring authority upon judicial tribunals to prevent the publication of obsence and immoral literature there has been provided a necessary measure of protection against a serious menace to the community. Having regard to the importance of the protection of the fruit and vegetable industry of the province by the operation of the salutary provisions of the Fruit Act of Canada, an act has been passed to give statutory effect to any provisions of the Federal law which may be beyond the competence of the Dominion Parliament to enact, reserving the right of the province to exercise its legislative authority on the subject wherever occasion may require.

"I thank you for the beneficial legislature you have enacted, and also for the financial provision you have made for carrying on the public services and undertakings of the province which will be administered in the interest alike of economy and efficiency," concluded His Honour. "In conclusion I trust that under the blessing and guidance of Providence your labours will advance the welfare and happiness of all our people."

THE OLD GARDENER SAYS:

Probably more vegetables will be planted in home gardens this season than in many years. This is an important economy measure. If properly managed, a plot 50 x 100 feet should provide fresh vegetables for a family of five, with a surplus of tomatoes, corn, beans and other kinds to can. There will also be parsnips, carrots, beets, squashes and turnips to store for winter. It will be impossible to get good crops without the use of fertilizers and nothing is better than barnyard manure if it can be obtained. When manure is used ,however, an application of 100 pounds of phosphate should be added because manure is not a balanced fertilizer. Only good seeds should be purchased, and care should be taken to avoid the common mistake of planting too deeply.

Mentioned in Exodus ix; 31, and in other books of the Bible, barley was one of the most important foods of the human race for thousands of years. Bere meal, as barley meal is called in Scotland, forms a favourite dish of porridge at the present day.

A feature of Canadian agriculture is the number of crops which are grown in localities specially suited to their production, of the most important being tobacco, flax and hemp for fibre, sugar beets, and maple syrup and sugar.

"Suppose you were to see the sun rising at night, what would you call that?" said the teacher to a country pupil whom she was examining on miracles.

"The moon, please, Miss," was the reply.

"But suppose you knew it was not the moon, but the sun, and you saw it actually rise in the middle of the night, what would you think?"

"Please, Miss, I'd think it was time to get up."

Is it Possible That the Course of Events in 1924 May Be Repeated in 1932?

DURING the first quarter of 1933, the bank crisis in the United States (with the consequent interruption of United States dollar quotations on the foreign exchange of the world, constituted one of the severest shocks that world business has encountered since the beginning of the depression. We may congratulate ourselves that it has not, of itself, so far as can be seen at this stage, intensified seriously the prevailing condition of depression. It must, nevertheless, be soberly recorded that during the first quarter of the New Year, business has become increasingly slack.

Following close upon a series of energetic measures, which were designed to cope with the bank crisis in the United States and have done much to restore confidence in that country, President Roosevelt has arranged for a series of meetings at Washington, with the representatives of eleven leading nations, preparatory to the long expected World Economic Conference, upon whose outcome a great deal will necessarily depend.

The staging of such a meeting at this time pointedly suggests a comparison between the conditions of the present moment, and those which faced the world during the last preceding depression, in the spring of 1924 when the prevailing conditions were not unlike those now facing us. The comparison is particularly timely, because certain changes occurred in the latter part of 1924, which were destined to bring the depression to an end, and which paved the way for prosperity during 1925-1929. We have no right to take for granted that any such changes will now be brought about. But a retrospect of the course of events in 1924 may help us materially towards an understanding of our problems in 1933.

It has frequently beeen insisted in this review, that one of the keys to the present situation is the crippled purchasing power of primary producers, and of farmers especially. This in turn is due to the very muc more rapid decline of prices since 1929 in the case of primary products, and of farm products especially, than in the case of manufactured goods. A parallel condition developed after the year 1920, which in some respects was not unlike the year 1929; the discrepancies between the prices of farm products and the prices of manufactured goods (discrepancies which appeared in 1921 and 1930 respectively) were widened, in the once case during 1922 and 1923, and in the other case during 1931 and 1932, till in 1924, as at the present moment, it was obvious that the farmer possessed no more than a fraction of the purchasing power which is his in normal times.

In the first place, the fall in the prices of manufactured goods, while less precipitate than that in the prices of farm products, was not long delayed in 1921. During the whole of that year, though the farmers' purchasing power was steadily falling, it was (to some extent, at least) being sustained by the cheapening of the goods that he must purchase. On the other hand, it is obvious that in 1930 and in the following years, the readjustment in the prices of manufactured goods, to the conditions prevailing in the markets for those goods, has been disappointingly slow.

In the second place (and as a consequence of this contrast between the relatively rapid fall in the prices of manufactures, during the years following 1920, and the relatively slow fall in the prices of manufactures during the years following 1929) the discrepancy between the prices of farm products and those of manufactured goods has been very much wider for fifteen months past, at least in Canada, than at any time during the depression of 1921-1924. The situation in its essence is clearly visible. There is no question but that the depression is more intense to-day than it was nine years ago.

As with our present perspective we look back upon the conditions of 1924 we see clearly that the gloomy foreboding at that time had no sound basis. Within a few months of the serious disturbance of the public mind, which these unfounded rumours produced, the horizon cleared as if a miracle had been performed. The change was signalized, and to no small extent brought about by circumstances which abruptly raised the prices farm products, during the last nine months of 1924, by nearly 50 per cent, thus restoring the purchasing power of the rural communities, in terms of manufactured goods, approximately to the 1920 level.

IT IS difficult to conceive of anything more fortunate that could have happened in 1924. It is difficult to conceive of anything more desirable to-day. Such an event if it could now be repeated would, of itself, do much to bring about a restored economic equilibrium in Canada. While no man would be so rash at this stage as to prophesy that 1933 will see such a development (for the likelihood of bitter disappointment following upon such a forecast is obviously too great) nevertheless, as has already been suggested above, we shall the more clearly visualize our present situation what were the forces which so changed the situation in 1924.

Two factors stand out most prominently: in the first place, the conception and implementation of the Dawes Plan; in the second place, the shortage of the cereal harvest of 1924. These two things together, the first-namely by greatly strengthening the financial resources of the great food-deficiency population in Europe, the second by lessening available supplies of cereals, did much at that time to restore the needed economic equilibrium.

With regard to the former, it will be remembered that during the French invasion of the Ruhr and the final inflationary orgies of the mark, the purchasing power of the German people shrank at an alarming rate, so that in the latter part of 1923 some 20,000,000 of them had been compelled to live under conditions nearly resembling starvation: and that in several of the countries bordering upon Germany somewhat similar conditions prevailed.

It will also be remembered that, following the adoption of the Dawes plan in 1924, the purchasing power of the German people revived very rapidly. Employment increased, and under-nourishment became a thing of the past. As evidence of the quickening of business, it may be stated that, between December 31st, 1923, and December 31st, 1924, the total currency circulation in Germany increased by no less than 88 per cent. A corresponding quickening occurred in the countries bordering upon Germany. Indeed it is not too much to say that business became more active, and employment more general, all over the world.

Meanwhile, in the very weeks in which the Dawes Plan was being put in operation, it became evident that the world's harvest of cereals in 1924 was destined to fall far short of expectations. In the case of wheat, considered alone, if we compare the 1924 figures with those of 1923, the deficiency was 385,000,000 bushels, or slightly more than 11 per cent. In that of other cereals, barley, rye, corn and oats, the proportionate deficiency was as great or even greater. With much more money to spend the wheat consumers of the world discovered that smaller supplies were being brought to market, not of wheat only, but of the chief cereal substitutes for wheat as well. This combination of circumstances sufficed, in the latter part of 1924, to drive up the prices, not of wheat only, but of all cereals and of most other agricultural products; thus doing much to restore equilibrium between agriculture and industry. A statesmanlike agreement between the representatives of half-a-dozen of the Powers combined with the vagaries of the weather to bring about economic recovery.

IN THE present condition of the world's affairs, while the war debts still overhang Europe and America like a cloud, while the barriers, old and new, which obstruct the movement of goods across international frontiers, are strangling trade with increasing effectiveness from month to month, there is an even more urgent need to-day for the same combination of tranquil and far-sighted statesmanship with the workings of Nature, to reduce the world's agricultural surplus and raise the prices of farm products.

Recent advices from the United States and elsewhere suggest that Nature may be playing much the same part this season as she played in 1924: that in more than one important cereal-producing country the harvest is likely to be deficient. Meanwhile, in the summons of eleven governments to Washington, and in if at this stage we consider briefly the World Economic Conference to be held later, there is an opportunity for statesmanship, decisive and unafraid, not unlike that which was seized in 1924. The stage is larger. The problems are more complex. The plight of the world is even more serious than in 1924. Popular passion is even more easily moved to-day, than at that time. But there is opportunity.

If statesmanship is confined in its efforts to the negotiation of small points, this great chance will certainly be lost. But if, by means of a few bold strokes, not counting minor costs, the burden of the war debts can be lifted, and the world's trade freed from the heaviest, at any rate, of the present shackles, it is possible that 1933 may yet be remembered as a year of achievement.

GROWTH.

IS YOUR CHILD HAPPY? The healthy child is a happy child. Your child is born with certain possibilities, and, in fairness to him, you should give him a chance to develop these to the full.

It is much more important to consider whether your child is growing and developing as he should rather than to compare his growth and development with the average of other children.

Growth means increase in size. The best growth is that which occurs when all parts of the body grow in their proper relative importance. There is no evidence to indicate that rapid growth is desirable.

When most people speak of normal heights and weights, they refer to an average or standard. Any child or adult may vary considerably from the average and still be normal. As individuals we vary one from the other and so it is that it is impossible to establish a normal for height or weight in the sense of a fixed standard which every normal person would maintain.

Growth is obviously desirable. It is during the earliest months of life that the most rapid growth occurs. By keeping an accurate record of the child's growth, his gain in weight and height, we have a most valuable index to his general physical condition.

It is for this reason that regular weighing of the baby is advised, and the practice should be continued, at longer intervals, throughout childhood. Regular gain is more important than the actual weight at any one time. Failure to gain in weight, or loss of weight, suggests that something is wrong and that the cause should be found and corrected.

The healthy child is, as we have said, a happy child. The healthy child gains regularly in weight. So we see that happiness and growth are related. The happy, healthy child has rosy cheeks and red lips. He is active, alert and interested, so much so that he is somewhat strenuous and noisy. He does not have to be coaxed to eat. He sleeps soundly.

This is the picture of a healthy child. Do not think your child is healthy just because he is not sick. If he is not growing properly, if he is quiet and uninterested in play, this does not mean that he is "a good boy;" it most likely indicates that he is not healthy.

The value of cut flowers sold in Canada for the year ended May 31st, 1932, was $1,093,927 or 68 per cent of the total value of the floricultural and decorative plant production by the Dominion during that period.

STRENGTH

WITH a click Alicia Margrave snapped the gate latch behind her and hurried down the street. At the corner she turned and fluttered her handkerchief quickly to the small figure that she knew was watching her from the front window. The crease between her eyes deepened; it was becoming a permanent thing in Alicia's white forehead.

"It's blue Monday for certain," she said to herself as she sped toward Main street. "Seems as if I had enough worries without anv more. And on my birthday too!" Angry tears sprang to her eves. "No concert for us to-night. Oh why doesn't father control his temper!"

With bitterness in her heart she stopped in front of a door with the word "Millinery" painted obliquelv across the plate glass. She lifted the latch and walked in. A large, formidable-looking woman in black stood in the middle of the room.

"You're late this morning, Miss Margrave," she said coldly.

The bitterness in Alicia's heart was crystallizing. She wanted to walk up to Mrs. Cartwright and tell her fiercely just why she was late but she merely said, "I'm sorry," and hastened down the long store with its gay display of hats and bonnets to the rear working room.

As she approached the door she heard a buzzing of voices. The moment that she stepped inside the buzzing instantly ceased, and she knew that the girls had been talking about her. The next second they were saying good morning to her in tones that were meant to sound natural.

As she crossed to the small cloakroom and took off her wraps she told herself that the girls were discussing her clothes, and resentment stirred within her. If they had what she had to contend with! But all six of them had comfortable homes and could spend what they earned for their own pleasure, especially Rae Milburn, who was rich and came to business in an expensive coat and silk dresses! Why should such as she be allowed to hold a position and take money that some poor girl should have! Alicia grudgingly admitted that Rae was deft and artistic, but of course, she told herself, that was why she was working—to gratify her artistic temperament.

Alicia passed out into the working room and took her black sateen apron from a drawer. Then she opened a box that contained the unfinished hat of Saturday and sat down silently to work.

The girls were laughing at something Rae Milburn had said. As Alicia glanced at the small figure perched on a stool and daintily weaving a blue ribbon into a saucy bow envy filled her heartfl If she had onlv a tenth of what Rae had she should be happy, extremely happy. She really wanted so little, just enough to live comfortably and to gratify her ambition as a designer. But when you have to worry over grocery bills and meat bills and coal bills and a dozen other bills you have little or nothing left for ambition or talent. If her father would only keep his temper and a job!

The whole situation as she had left it that morning passed through her mind once more—her father's surliness over his discharge, her mother's worried eyes, and the twins' grumbling over worn-out shoes. And the burden was all on her her own shoulders! It seemed as if she had always had burdens to carry. Wrath burned in her soul. It was all so unjust, so unfair!

A bustling sound of some one entering the room caused her to raise her eyes. It was Mrs. Cartwright. In her hand she held a plume of delicate lavender, rich ,soft and exquisite. The girls exclaimed as she held it up.

"To be used on a hat for Mrs. Mortimer Warner," she explained briefly and with a touch of pride, for to have Mrs. Mortimer Warner for a customer meant something.

For a moment she surveyed the little group in front of her, and her glance rested on Alicia; she made a movement as if to approach her, but changed her mind and crossed to the stool on which Rae Milburn was seated.

"Miss Wilburn," she said. "I think you are capable of designing a hat for this plume Let me see what you can do."

Animated, exciting remarks followed as Mrs. Cartwright left the room. Alicia alone was silent. Only on rare occasions did Mrs. Cartwright assign to anyone the task of original designing. And to design a hat suitable for that magnificent plume! Alicia clasped her hands. How well she could have done it. Envy, wrath and hatred were wrestling in her heart when the lunch hour drew near.

She went home with her eyes burning with unshed tears. Why should Rae Milburn get every good things while she who had so many crosses to bear was denied even the pleasure of designing a hat! The more she thought of it the greater her resentment grew. Silently, almost sullenly, she sat down to lunch. She made no comment when her mother with a nervous catch in her throat said, "Your father has gone to look for another place. I think they will take him at Ross and Bowers'."

Mrs. Margrave paused, then in a kindly voice added, "I'm sorry, Alicia, all this happened on your birthday. If father had not come in with the news of his discharge before you had gone to work I shouldn't have told you about it until to-morrow. As it is, I think you would be perfectly justified in going to the concert to-night. Birthdays come only once a year, and you had counted so much on this treat. Just get a ticket for yourself, deary, and go along. I don't mind staying home; really I don't."

For a moment Alicia looked at her mother with softened eyes. Then she shook her head sharply, and all the bitterness was in her voice again as she said. "No; we can't afford it. Father may not get another place for a long time, and if he does his ungoverned temper will soon rid him of it. We shall have to go on being careful!"

She rose abruptly from the table and left the room. She could not bear to see the tragic look in her mother's eyes—a look that always appeared at times like this. Poor mother! How she pitied her!

Though Alicia returned to the shop early, she was astonished to find all of the girls there before her—a most unusual circumstance. Something was in the air. Alicia plainly scented it. A little later she discovered by accident that the girls had all lunched together downtown and had not invited her to join them! The seeming slight cut deep.

That afternoon she applied herself more closely than ever to her work and responded briefly to any remarks addressed to her. It seemed to her that the rest were unusually gay. There were many sudden bursts of admiration over the hat that Rae was skillfully fashioning, and at each outburst Alicia felt a fresh wave of misery. She told herself that she almost hated Rae.

That afternoon dragged to a close, but when five o'clock came Alicia did not hurry to put away her work. Though she was glad the day was done, she dreaded to go back to the depressing atmosphere of her home. The others were in a greater hurry than usual to get away. Alicia noted it particularly. Probably they had something planned for the evening.

For a moment she stood at the window and looked out at the gray March sky and at the still grayer yards and the unattractive backs of the buildings. They fairly represented her gray life. The janitress with her broom and brushes opened the door, and Alicia turned slowly toward the cloakroom. She was just slipping into her jacket when she heard a sharp exclamation in the other room. Flinging the door open, she saw the janitress with her head out of the raised window, pointing excitedly skyward. Alicia looked out. High in the air, whirling round and round, was Mrs. Mortimer Warner's fluffy lavender plume!

The janitress brought her head back with a jerk. "Did you see that now! What tricks these March winds do play on you! The minute I histed that window, didn't a little whirlwind come a-prancin' into the room and whisk the feather out of doors!"

As the woman turned to her broom and brushes Alicia gave an involuntary little laugh. Then with a start she realized that the plume was valuable. It must be rescued at any cost! She looked wildly out of the window. No one was in sight.

And then all the misery that the plume had cost her flashed through her mind. What did it matter what became of it! Rae Milburn would be held responsible. Let her replace it. It had been careless of her not to put it away in a drawer. She had been in such a hurry to leave!

She started to turn back from the window; then her cheeks flamed. A few moments later she was on the ground, looking anxiously for the runaway plume. She spied it fluttering lazily downward in the calm that had followed the spurt of high March wind. It landed on the roof of a shed behind the drug store two doors down.

She ran forward to reach the plume before another capracious wind carried it away. She would have to scale a high board fence, but she had not been in athletics in school for nothing. Once over that, she reached the shed. It was higher than she had thought, and no ladder was in sight. She looked round. Some one had flung a backless chair into one corner of the yard. She seized it, propped its rickety legs against the building, then, lifting a block of wood that stood near by, she placed it on the wooden seat. Climbing up ,she was able to seize the projecting edge firmly; then she laboriously drew herself up until her knees were level with the roof. The rest was easy. Another moment and the truant plume, none the worse for its flight, was safe in her hand.

As she rested a moment to get her breath she heard the sound of shouting. It came from the direction of the millinery shop; the girls were there, leaning out of the window, waving to her. Why had they come back?

With little effort she reached the ground and scampered back nimbly over the fence. With the aid of the girls she entered the window from which she had recently dropped; and then amid excited exclamations and questions she told of the chase after the plume. Rae Milburn's cheeks were a little white as she listened.

"O Alicia!" she exclaimed. "Supposing you had not bee here. I don't see how I could have forgotten to put the feather away. But yes, I do too, for all of us had something extremely important to do." She halted and, smilingly, looked at the other girls. Then she reached into a little green silk bag she carried and, drawing forth a tiny box, handed it to Alicia. "For you, my dear, for your birthday from all of us!"

Alicia gasped, looked wonderingly into the faces grouped round her and then slowly took the box. "For me!" she exclaimed. "Why, how did you know it was my birthday!"

"Oh, we knew," Rae said vaguely. "But it was only this morning that we noticed the date and got our heads together. It was lucky for us you were late!"

The girls smiled as they watched Alicia lift the cover from the little box. "A ring!" she exclaimed. "A signet ring my initials!"

"Oh, those initials caused us some anxiety, I assure you!" laughed Anna Sherman. "During lunch hour when we chose the ring the jeweller declared he could not have the initials engraved by five o'clock, but we finally consented. And didn't we fly round for it to-night while Bertha stood guard at the door to detain you when you came out. But you didn't come; so we marched in to see what had become of you and found you sitting on the roof of a shed!"

Alicia thanked her friends in a bewildered kind of wav. A dozen things were crowding through her mind—her hasty conclusion that the girls were gossiping about her and slighting her when they had actually been planning to give her a great surprise; her unjust resentment toward Rae Milburn because of the plume; and worst of all her momentary ignoble attitude regarding the recovery of it.

She felt Rae Milburn's arm round her waist. "And now, Alicia, I want you to come home to dinner with me. Please don't say no. I want you very particularly."

Alicia gave a little subdued gasp. To be invited to the Milburns' for dinner! She looked down at her rather shabby suit. "Oh, I couldn't go this way!" she objected. "Besides, mother would worry most fearfully, if I didn't come home."

Rae flung out her arm by way of protest. "You are dressed perfectly all right. There are only mother and I, you know. And Bertha has agreed to stop and tell your mother where you are. So you see it is all arranged!"

That evening in the Milburn home was a revelation to Alicia. The woman she had always thought cold and proud and haughty was just a sweet, gentle, motherly soul with lines of care round her tired eyes. Shortly after dinner she went to her room and left the two girls alone in the drawing-room with its luxurious furnishings It was then that Rae drew Alicia down beside her on the soft low divan and took one of her hands in her own.

"What capable-looking hands you have, Alicia!" she exclaimed unexpectedly. "And how capable and strong you yourself are! Just looking at you sometimes gives me the strength I need. I have often felt that I wanted to bury my head on your shoulder and cry out my troubles to you!"

Alicia jerked herself bolt upright and stared at the girl beside her. "Why, Rae!" she cried, scarcely believing her ears. "You mean to say you have one single thing to worry you? I had always supposed you to be quite the most care-free person alive!"

Tears came into Rae's eyes. "I suppose almost everyone feels the same way; but, oh, my dear, they don't know!"

There was a long silence. Rae's grip on Alicia's hand tightened.

"I'm going to tell you something," she said firmly in a strained voice. "I must talk to some one. I know you will understand." She paused a moment, then said abruptly, "Father is not dead, as everyone thinks he is. He is in South America, but just where we do not know; he forged a cheque and ran awav!"

The girl's low tone fell to a whisper as she made what to Alicia's ears was an astounding statement. "He left us almost penniless," Rae continued. "The house is heavily mortgaged, and we can't stay here mush longer. We are trying to sell it. Poor mother's heart broken!"

A smothered sob burst from the girl's lips. Alicia closed her hand over the fingers that gripped her.

"I don't mind much for myself," Rae went on. "I love my work, but even if I didn't I should be obliged to do something, for I am the only one mother has to depend on. She tries to be brave and declares she really enjoys doing the housework and making clothes over for me, but I am sure she feels the physical strain of it all. At fifty-five it is not easy to begin a new kind of life.

Rae halted. For a long moment Alicia was silent. The story to which she had just listened seemed too astonishing for words. It was contrary to every idea she had ever had of the Milburn household. At last she slipped an arm round Rae's slender waist.

That night the Alicia who let herself quietly into the still, darkened Margrave house and sped noiselessly to her room was a very different girl from the one who had gone away at noon with resentful words on her lips.

"And she called me strong!" she whispered to herself behind the closed door. I, who have taken no pains to conceal my bitterness and have made mother's life doubly hard with my fretting and impatience. It is plucky little Rae Milburn that is the strong one." Then she looked down at her finger and added, "This signet ring shall be my constant reminder that in silent, cheerful endurance shall lie my strength."

The following morning Alicia awakened earlier than usual, and instantly her mind was flooded with the events of yesterday. The tribute Rae had paid her stood out by itself. How many kinds of strength there were! She had never thought of it before. Strength to endure, strength to resist, strength to conquer yourself — a strength she particularly needed. She had made no more effort to conquer her impatience than her father had made to conquer his impatience.

The sound of some one walking softly across the floor in the adjoining room caught her ear. It was her mother dressing quietly so as not to disturb the other members of the household. Alicia glanced at the clock It was only six . What a long day her mother had! Then a new thought came to her, and for several moments she lay still, thinking of the particular strength that was her mother's. The next second she sprang out of bed. In less than ten minutes she was tripping noiselessly downstairs to the kitchen.

The kettle was just beginning its morning murmur when Mrs. Margrave appeared in the doorway and halted abruptly. "Why, Alicia!" she exclaimed. "How is this?"

Alicia laughed back from the table at which she was beating eggs for the breakfast muffins. "You're surprised, aren't you, mother, dear? I don't wonder ,since I've been such a selfish creature, allowing you to get breakfast every morning when you ought to be saving your strength! The programme is changed now; I'm going to be the first one up."

"But you're working hard all day, and I—"

"Not half so hard as you work, mother. You can't sit down and do housework."

Alicia threw her mother a bright smile. The instant response, Alicia thought, was worth a hundred years of early risings!

After Mrs. Margrave had partly recovered from her astonishment she said to Alicia, "What do you suppose! Richard Morgan has offered your father a position in his office."

Alicia's face brightened. "How perfectly splendid!" she exclaimed.

"But I'm afraid he won't accept it." The old worried look crept into Mrs. Margarve's eyes. "He said he didn't think he'd like to work for Richard, that people referred to him as a slave driver, and he couldn't stand for that. Oh, I do wish he'd take it! He can't afford to be idle!"

Immediatelv the impatience that Mr. Margrave's disturbing disposition always aroused in Alicia leaped uppermost. She managed to check the words that crowded to her lips.

It was when the three were eating their early breakfast before the twins were down that she quietly told of the evening she had spent at the Milburn home. Then in confidence she told of the disappearance of Mr. Milburn. "How glad I am that I haven't a father to be ashamed of!" she concluded. "The man who lives decently and earns an honest living for his family is a man to be proud of!" She gave her father a quick smile.

For a moment Mr. Margrave look dazed, and then a half-pleased expression stole into his moody eyes. Alicia had never before spoken to him in just that way. A few minutes later he briskly arose from the breakfast table and left the room. He returned almost immediately with his coat on his arm.

"Don't look for me at lunch today," he said. "You're never sure what lunch hour you'll get in a new place. They tell me Richard Morgan conducts his business a little differently from most men."

As the front door closed Mrs. Margrave turned a beaming face toward her daughter. "Oh, Alicia!" she cried breathlessly. "He's going to take the place! And it's all because of that lovely thing you said to him! I'm sure of it! I guess he was a little downhearted and discouraged and needed somebody to say something like that!"

Alicia smiled happily and pressed her mother's hand tight in her own.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

By Etta Bitta Pye

It is very easy to make those little twirled fruit-filled rolls, with their sweet and spicy filling, when you use an ordinary biscuit dough as a base.

You can use prepared biscuit flour if you like—just add the amount of milk or water called for on the package to the quantity of flour you need —then mix and roll out your dough to a quarter-inch sheet and spread on the filling. Or you can make a standard biscuit dough yourself, and roll it out and use it the same way.

Fruit Rolls.

To tea biscuit recipe, add 2 tablespoons sugar Roll dough 1-3 inch thick. Spread with:

2 tablespoons butter (softened)
1-3 cup brown sugar
½ teaspoon cinnamon
1-3 cup currants or raisins

Shape into a roll; press edges together. Cut into ¾-inch slices. Place in greased baking-pan, close together, with cut surfaces up and down. Bake in a hot oven 15 to 20 minutes.

Tea Biscuits.

2 cups flour
4 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
2 to 3 tablespoons fat
2-3 cup milk

Sift flour, baking powder and salt. Cut in the fat with a knife or a cookie cutter. Add milk gradually to form a soft dough This should be done with as little mixing as possible. Turn out on slightly floured board, roll ¼-inch thick. Cut with floured biscuit cutter; place on greased or floured pan; bake in hot oven 15 to 20 minutes. Temperature—400 degrees to 425 degrees F.

(Note: If sour milk is used, reduce the baking powder to 1 teaspoon in 1 cup of flour; add soda in the proportion of ¼ teaspoon to 1 cup sour milk.)

THE PERENNIAL BORDER IN MAY

Experimental Farms Note.

THE perennial border may be quite attractive in the month of May if a sufficient number of plants of a comparatively few kinds of flowers have been planted. At the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, it has been found that the most satisfactory method for general effect for small borders is planting a large number of small clumps of each sort. Daffodils and tulips are very effective in many small clumps between the other plants. The daffodils and early tulips will be in bloom the early part of May while the Darwin and Cottage tulips will give the general effect during the latter part of the month. One of the perennials which can be grown readily in large numbers from seed is the Iceland Poppy and this charming plant scattered throughout the border will bloom throughout the month. Other good perennials which bloom in May are the Virginia Cowslip (Mertensia virginica), Globe Flower (Trollius), Trilliums of several species, of which the most satisfactory is Trillium grandiflorium which has done particularly well under cultivation at the Experimental Farm, Ottawa. The Primulas, while beginning to bloom in April extend their blooming season well into May, the many varieties of the Polyanthus being particularly showy.

There are several species of Epimedium or Barrenwort which are very good. The most satisfactory one is that known in the trade as E. rubrum.

For the front of the border such low growing plants as the Moss Pink (Phlox subulata), and its many varieties, and the Double White flowered Rock Cress or Arabis will furnish abundance of bloom for most of the month and the dwarf Irises give a charming effect where they succeed.

Co-operative organization forms an integral part of the economic fabric of Canadian agriculture and is practised extensively in every province.

St. George's Day Inaugurates Drive for Restoration Fund

After months of intensive preparation and study, the drive for the "Restoration Fund" of the Anglican Church was inaugurated on Sunday. An every person canvass is being made during this week, April 23rd to 30th, to restore the lost endowments of the western dioceses of the church caused by defalcations discovered last year which amounted to many thousands of dollars.

The fund is under the distinguished patronage of His Excellency, Lord Bessborough, Governor-General of Canada, and the president is the Primate, the Most Reverend Clare L. Worrell, Archbishop of Nova Scotia.

Beginning on St. George's Day, April 23rd, it is a fitting augury for the rescue of the church from the danger of its terrible losses, Rev. G. O. Davies, rector of Holy Trinity, said during his sermon on Sunday evening in which he made an earnest appeal for co-operation so that the drive may be an overwhelming success.

The local canvassers are Mrs. H. H. Casselman, and Mr. G. W. Brooks, who is acting as treasurer of the local committee.
