A Start in the Right Direction

The temptation to spend money in your pocket is greater than when your money is in a savings account in the bank. That margin of temptation may mark the difference between an opportunity to go into business later on or of working for wages with nothing saved and nothing ahead, at the end of your working years.

Why not open a savings account in The Bank of Nova Scotia today?

Your account will be welcomed and you will have made a start in the right direction.

Pie Social at Morewood

The Methodist Ladies Aid of Morewood will hold a Pie Social in the Presbyterian Hall, on Friday Feby 25th when lunch will be served and a programme provided. Admission 35c.

Chesterville 5, Winchester 2.

Friday evening the local hockey club entertained the Winchester team on their final visit for the season in the hockey league on local ice. The game had about as much snap to it as a pink tea for the greater portion of the hour of play. Hockey came to the surface for about five minutes after the beginning of the last period but quietly subsided before any great enthusiasm was shown. The score at full time stood 5 to 2 in favor of the home team.

Winchester were without the services of Robinson and Jack Fader.

High Prices Realized at Landry's Sale.

It is easily seen that James Currie, the old time auctioneer of Crysler, is on the warpath again by the prices at Ovila Landry's sale last week. It was one of the most largely attended sales in this part of the country for a long time, between fifteen hundred and two thousand people being on hand. Horses brought from $165 to $205, grade cattle from $100 to $175 about as good as registered stock. Hens sold as high as $2.35 each. Other prices were in keeping with those mentioned. James Currie assisted by his brother John handled the sale which was advertised in The Record.

Rev. A. J. Sinclair Inducted

On Thursday last a meeting of the Presbytery of Brockville in Chesterville Presbyterian Church with Rev. Mr. Ussher, moderator of the Presbytery presiding, the induction took place of Rev. A. J. Sinclair into the charges of Dunbar and Chesterville. The Church was filled by the large number present from both congregations.

Rev. Peter Jamieson of South Mountain, preached the induction sermon, Rev. F. L. Jobb of Morewood, addressing the newly inducted minister and Rev. Mr. Glassford of Winchester, speaking to the people, on duties of each towards the other. At the close of the service refreshments were served by the ladies of the Chesterville congregation.

Death of Mr. Gordon Feader.

Very suddenly the call came on Monday, Feb. 21st about 6.30 p.m. to Mr. G. W. Feader, who with his wife, resided near the station at Winchester.

He had attended a special meeting of the Quarterly Board of the Methodist church at 2 p.m. leaving for home after 4 p.m. When the evening meal was finished his wife was reading to him the chapter in the Bible out of which Sunday's text had been taken, when his head dropped to one side and he was gone. His religion was practical. His pastor could always depend upon him for any form of Christian service, and he had that afternoon accepted a piece of work to do in connection with the special services now going on in his church. He is survived by his wife and a son and daughter.

Robert Kirkwood Sr. Has Narrow Escape

What might have proved a fatal accident happened to Mr. Robert Kirkwood of Toys Hill, last Saturday. After dinner he went back to his son's bush where they were in process of falling a tree. When the tree was falling Mr. Kirkwood ran but instead of running the opposite direction ran the way it was falling and was pinned to the ground. Medical aid was at once summoned and upon examination found Mr. Kirkwood had received a severe gash on the head, a fractured shoulder and a broken leg, as well as some other minor bruises. Up to the present Mr. Kirkwood is progressing favourably.

NOTICE

There will be a meeting in Froats' Hall, Williamsburg, Thursday evening, March 3rd, for the purpose of organizing the Temperance forces of the township of Williamsburg for the coming Referendum campaign. All temperance workers are requested to be present.

One Month & $500 Fine for Bootlegger

Last Friday night while the hockey match was in progress two alleged bootleggers were quietly taken into custody by Inspector Stick and Officer Wetherall of the Provincial police, of Cornwall. Two young men, Abrams and Eamer of Cornwall vicinity, who have been making periodic visits to Chesterville arrived in town Thursday night last looking up customers for the forbidden llquor aud in a businesslike way made it known that they had come to dispense their goods until the following Saturday. Advice was given the proper authorities with the result that both men were landed behind the bars on Friday night and transferred to Cornwall jail on Saturday. When they were taken Abrams was working inside the rink while Eamer kept watch along the street at the north side. The latter becoming suspicious of men approaching warned his partner by going to the fence and giving the signal, only to come back into the hands of the officers. Abrams made a quick get-away over the south side fence going down town, but not knowing the fate of his companion went back to the rink to investigate and was taken by the officers as he turned from Main street towards the rink.

At Cornwall yesterday Abrams was taken before the magistrate on three charges of selling liquor and was convicted of selling in Chesterville on Saturday, Feb. 12th, and given one month in jail with a fine of $500 or in default of payment of the fine, a further five months' imprisonment.

When the suit cases of the pair were searched here a burglar's outfit was found also some of the goods stolen from H. J. McMahon's store early in the winter, which Mr. McMahon identified, and for stealing which he laid a charge against Abrams which case is proceeding with judgment reserved on other charges of liquor selling. Eamer is held in custody.

Miss Violet Weegar, Elma, Honored

A number of friends gathered at the home of Miss Annie Froats, Dunbar, on Wednesday evening Feb. 16th, to bid farewell to Miss Violet Weegar before leaving for Buffalo. About 11 o'clock the gathering was called to order when a very appropriate address was read by Miss Beatrice Fetterley, while Miss Kezia Pemberton presented Miss Weegar with a beautiful leather club bag.

Dear Violet:—

We, your friends, have gathered here this evening to spend with you a few social hours before you depart from our midst. You have spent all your life in this vicinity and you have won many friends. We all wish to express our sorrow at this gathering at losing one of our popular young ladies. We will miss your active help and social intercourse in this community as secretary of the Lutheran League and organist in the church for a number of years, and as you go from here to Buffalo we ask you to carry our best wishes for a very happy and prosperous future.

Although we may be separated for some time we wish you to remember your old friends you are leaving, and as a small remembrance we ask you to kindly accept this gift as a small token of our love and esteem.

Signed on behalf of the choir and Lutheran League of Dunbar.

Miss Weegar made a very fitting reply thanking her friends for their kindness, lunch was then served and the remainder of the evening spent in music and games.

Home Team Trims Williamsburg

An interesting exhibition hockey game was played on the Chesterville rink Monday evening when Williamsburg made their appearance in their first game against a Central Valley league team and were beaten by 4 to 2. The visitors have some fast men who are good stick handlers but the whole outfit seems to have been playing the game under Marquis of Queensbury rules, and were ready at any and all stages to drop hockey and start a scrap. The visitors started the scoring by gathering their only counters in the first period before the home team wakened up to the fact that a game of hockey was on instead of a little work out in preparation for the big game to-night at Berwick. When the Williamsburg boys were going real nice and fast Johnnie Sorrel demonstrated to them just how a puck should be taken through an opposing defence and landed in the net. As if they had not learned the lesson sufficiently Johnnie repeated it for their benefit and afterwards scored another on a long shot. With four minutes to go Chesterville scored last making the total 4 to 2 in their favor.

E. L. Bronskill and Stirton Phyfer handled the game.

Get The News Habit

One of the things that ought to become a fixed habit in every household in this distrlct is that of sending The Record the news items that you may know of; tell us of your news and any neighborhood or other items that will be of interest to your neighbors or your friends.

Every lodge, church, body or social organization should have some representadive who will look promptly and carefully after its news reporting. If you think some organization has better news service than your own, it is probably because that organization looks after matters better.

Write your items and send them in when possible. Or telephone them, but please do not ask that long lists of names be taken over the telephone, as it not only requires much time, but usually errors occur in lists thus given.

Above all, be early. Never wait till the last minute to send in an item that can be sent in early.

Record Made by Holstein at University

(Edmonton Bulletin)

Rosebud Mutual De-Kol, a three-year-old Holstein owned by the Department of Animal Husbandry, University of Alberta, now holds the three-year-old Holstein Friesian butter fat record for the three prairie provinces. She was bred by W. A. McElroy of Chesterville, Ont., and purchased by the University of Alberta in January, 1916, when just under twelve months of age. Sired by De-Kol Mutual Count 16302, and out of the cow Rosebud Maid, 10485, with a year's record of 21,190 lbs. milk and 905 lbs. butter fat, it will be evident that her ability to produce has been inherited from meritorious ancestors. As a two-year-old, Rosebud Mutual De-Kol produced 12,938 pounds of milk and 610 pounds of butter. In her three-year-old form she gave 17,387 lbs. milk and 887.5 lbs. butter. This is not only the three-year-old record for the Prairie Provinces, but places her sixth in the entire Dominion.

Birds are Nestling in Renfrew County

(Eganville Leader, Feby 11)

Two Grattan woodsmen, Paul Meike and Hugh Smith, while falling a tree the other day on the latter's premises, had their attention attracted by a small bird, grayish brown in color, which flew about them in noisy demonstration. The explanation was furnished a few moments later when the tree fell and there was discovered on a high branch a birds nest containing a live fledging. This in midwinter is considered remarkable.

Cornwall Pastor Speaks Out

In the course of his morning discourse in St. John's Presbyterian Church, Cornwall, on Sunday, the pastor, Rev. Hugh Munroe, B. A., speaking on the subject, the "Joy of Serious Living," quoted from the Montreal Gazette's Ottawa correspondent to the effect that during the report given to the House of Commons on the League of Nations there was a very slim attendance of members, and the correspondent said that the members were evidently more interested in the euchre league and hockey league in room 16 than they were in the League of Nations, and that they evidently preferred domestic issues to interest outside our Dominion. Rev. Mr. Munroe characterized this condition of the members as entirely unworthy of men who claimed to be worth $4,000 a year to the country, and said they had no more moral right to be absent from the House at such a time than a minister had to be absent from his pulpit on a Sunday. The young soldiers who went from Canada a few years age might have preferred domestic issues, too but their time, even their lives, were claimed by the Government. The country was now in serious mood and would support any government in eliminating the men who will not give intelligeht service as members of Parliament.

Fell From Train.

While travelling from Glen Roy to Green Valley, on the afternoon eastbound local C. P. R. Tuesday, Maria McDonald, a young girl of 17 years, residing in the vicinity of Glen Roy, had a miraculous escape from death. As the train neared Green Valley the brakesman having announced the name of the next stop, Miss McDonald rushed to the door and. on to the car platform from which apparently she fell. The train at the time was going at considerable speed. The newsboy seeing the occurrence, pulled the emergency cord and the train was backed up to the scene of the accident. It was found she had sustained severe injuries to her head and bruises on her body and it was deemed advisable to take her into Montreal where she is now undergoing treatment at the Western Hospital. —Glengarry News.

Stockings

Life would be tolerable if there were not so many things to be done over again.

Work that is certain is inspiration. When you are building a new house you seem really to be living; that is barring architects and plumbers and other such intrusive and unnecessary people. You are looking forward, getting forward, thinking new thoughts, making progress with your character and your soul. What a wealth of development there is in the plans, the arrangements, the improvements! Why, you did not realize before how fast the world was growing! Or, in the inner life, say you learn a new language. Here is labor that is really fruitful, hours that mean something, new experience, new contact, doors opening on wide, rich prospects from which endless depth and power of living can be gained. Even in the humbler realms of domesticity true and satisfying creation is constantly possible. You make a new gown and you seem to be getting somewhere, to be adding something to the dull routine of life, even if it is a perishable something, too quickly and easily forgotten. You learn to cook a new dish and for the moment you can lose yourself in it. You add this touch and that touch and tremble to think how it will come out.

But then there are the things that have to be done over. When the cooking is finished, whether it has failed or succeeded, there are the same old dishes to be washed in the same old sink in the same old way. There is the same old dirt to be got out of the same old corners. No matter how faithfully you get it out to-day it is there again to-morrow. And there is always mending, mending, mending, whether the universe is coming to an end or not. Stockings sum it all up, always the stockings. How in the name of mystery do they wear out so? And in these days of cost and saving they must be darned, darned, darned, until there is more darn than stocking left.

When other work is all done and bed seems so indescribably attractive there is that mountainous pile of unfulfiled obligation waiting in the workbasket, and the thought of it seems to reduce the world to a black multiplicity of incompleteness.

Presentation in Nation Valley.

On Tuesday evening last the young people of this vicinity and several outsiders met to say farewell to Mr. Albert Le Vere who has resided in this district for the past thirteen years. Before refreshments were served Mr. Le Vere was invited to the floor where Mr. Ernest Gray read the following address.

Dear Albert:—

When you came into our vicinity some years ago, a lad, you were a stranger unknown to anv of us. The years as they passed, have made you a man and have revealed you to us to be earnest, industrious, faithful, honorable, respectable and obliging. These are stirling qualities and have won you a place in our midst. You have helped n ot only our friends with whom you have made your home but also, we believe, your life has helped our neighborhood. So much for the days that are gone.

Standing as it were, on the threshold gazing, trying to discern what is ahead, we realize we can discover nothing about it. God Himself alone knows just what the future holds in store for each one of us; that He cares; that He plans for us we know—that is enough. Let "now" be your watchword. Do the right thing "now" and, when the present becomes part of the past, you will not need to worry about your record—your footprints will be well worth following. May you ever continue to be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.—And wherever you find yourself as the days come to you, never lower your standard.

As a token of our good-will and fellowship kindly accept this purse trom your Nation Valley friends. Signed Donald Darling, Ernest Beckett, Norman Moodie.

The presentation was made by Mr Enos Munroe. Mr. Le Vere made a short but pleasing reply which was received by hearty clapping of hands. Then all joined hands with "He's a jolly good fellow". Refreshments were served and the rest of the evening was spent in dancing.

Let 'Em Have It Says Jack

Editor J. J. Hunter says in the Kincardine Reporter:—That little old sessional indemnity is coming up, so rumor says, and rumor is generally the forerunner of truth or slander. It looks this time as if it were truth. The members all found it was more expensive to sit around good hotels and chew tooth-picks, buy newspapers, have their shoes blacked and smoke cigars, instead of a clay pipe, than they ever dreamed of. There's another little item that enters into the bill of expense. We drop in to see our member. He hasn't got over his courtesy of the farm and says: "Have dinner with me." It costs him an extra dollar. He may hope you will refuse, but you don't, you go up to the feed trough, drink out of the finger bowls and all the rest of it, even leaving your member to tip the waiter. This happens often during the session. You may only go once, but there are fifty more just like you, and some of them make it a point to accidently run into the member several times. Lots of them never voted for him, but that don't matter. Ain't he common prey for all. You bet, he's our servant. We sent him to parliament and we're going to bleed him. Not only do we bleed him by imposing on his hospitality, but we can't have a dog fight that we don't ask him to, and we watch the collection plate when he drops his contribution into it. If it's less than a $5 spot he's a piker and no good. We don't tell him so, we just go around and whisper it where it will do the most good if we are opposed to him. If we are not, we keep it to ourselves and lay it up against him mentally. When he casts up accounts at the end of the year he finds we have bled him until his blood is chalky white. Now to be fair, who is it that makes him want more indemnity? It is the people he is serving. Don't blame him. Let him have it, for he deserves it. He has to listen to our sarcasms and would be witticisms at his expense and smile an assent, when he would love to hand us a punch. Let us pay him well for he is the one football we can kick at will for a four year hire. So is the man who represents you in parliament.

Keeping Potatoes From Sunburning.

Many housewives have to use sunburned potatoes throughout the winter and spring, as the result of a little needlessness. They wonder why their potatoes turn dark when they are cooked and are not more mealy and palatable. Two much light in the cellar is frequently the cause. Potatoes may be injured by sunshine without actually showing sunburn on the surface. Often you can detect the slight greenish tinge just beneath the skin when there are no outward signs of it. It may be seen at times as a distinct layer of green cells immediately below the outer skin.

In the ordinary cellar potatoes are kept in too much light. The housewife uses those from the top of the pile and thus exposes those beneath, which in turn are subjected to the unfavorable light rays. In that way it is easy to be using sunburned potatoes constantly without realizing it. Potatoes that have been in a light room or in line with the sunlight shining through a cellar window for only a very few days are seriously injured. They are heavy and soggy, dark colored and not uniform in texture when cooked.

It is always advisable to keep the potato pile covered with gunny sacks, canvas or some such material if the cellar is at all light. It is still easier to tack gunny sacks over the windows.

Basket Willow will grow in swampy places that are of no value for any other purpose, and it is not uncommon for the owner to make more money from such tracts than he makes from carefully cultivated fields. Three tons of willow cuttings to the acre is a quite possible yield, and this year the product is in active demand at prices that range from $35 to $45 a ton.

The idle young man forty years from now will be a needy old one.

His Specimen

By LINCOLN ROTHBLUM

(Copyright, 1919, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Prof. Duncan Parminter sat down to breakfast and glanced at the mail lying just to the right of his coffee. The frock coat and somber tie of black silk ineffectively coped with the clear eyes and too-well-formed lips, and the whiteness of the collar sharply contrasted with the black hair which persisted in curling about the ears and along the nape of the neck.

"Good morning, Duncan," was the smiling greeting of his mother, a very maternal sort of woman; "what do you see to smile at in that letter? Enough for two to smile at?"

He handed it to her and she read aloud:

"Prof. Duncan Parminter, City.

"Recognizing your knowledge and ability along the lines of this committee's activities, you have been selected to conduct its investigations with particular reference to the public dance hall evil. Mail the result of your findings to the morals investigating committee.

"Respectfully,
"CELIA DOANE."

"Celia Doane," Mrs. Parminter repeated, "I met her some time ago and she is a wonder. She is the type of girl I should like to see you marry."

The professor raised his hands in silent protest. The kind of girl his mother approved was not an infrequent topic of discussion between them. When he gave the matter any thought privately he felt that he leaned toward celibacy.

"Well, you must marry some time, Duncan," she reiterated, "and this investigation business may help you to appreciate a girl like Celia Doane. Go this very evening to the Palace hall and see conditions there."

The professor acknowledged acceptance of the commission, and accordingly that evening, it had scarcely turned 8 o'clock, when he approached the entrance to the Palace hall, flaringly resplendent in a maze of multicolored electric lights.

He entered the hall. He was alone. Was not this the right place? Down the aisle he noticed an attendant, her jaws working rhythmically on gum which to sustain the truth of its advertising that the flavor was permanent, still cast forth its scented sweetness. The professor wished he had the temerity to speak. He would inquire if this perhaps were a dull night.

"Sure you don't mean to stand there and tell me you've never been to this here place before, do yuh? Naw, the crowd don't get together till nearly 10."

The professor felt himself properly rebuffed for his ignorance of so well-known a custom and passed hurriedly on in a direct line for a chair he had espied in a far corner. He did not know how long he had remained in this semi-conscious seclusion when the music, with a tremendous bang from the drummer, suddenly set into motion innumerable couples on the floor's center. It was a good crowd.

The professor felt her coming toward him and arose to escape. But she interpreted his move as an advance, and thrusting her arm through his with good-natured comaraderie, snuggled up close to him.

"Hello, Cutey; music's swell tonight; ain't it?"

As he tried to determine how he could most diplomatically correct her imperfect English, he found himself on the other side of the ropes with the girl. To him a roped-in place always suggested prize fighting. The professor did not know very much about dancing, and within a few moments the girl knew he didn't. She had no hesitancy in telling him so.

"I guess you ain't had so much practice in dancin'. Let's sit out." And with a sure step she guided him safely through the maze of dancers and deposited him in his corner. "You look better'n you can dance," and with the parting thrust she was gone. The professor regretted her hasty departure. He wanted to learn the name of the soporific perfume she exuded and he did want to tell her that her petticoat showed.

The professor suddenly remembered In all such reports mention must be made of the attitude of the girls and men toward each other, and he would investigate one particular individual as a specimen. There was a girl who did not seem so—er—brazen. He would investigate her, and summoned courage to approach.

"No, I don't care to dance."

The professor was very sorry Would she care to sit out? And as he led her to his corner, he secretly complimented himself on his rare judgment in so neatly managing his investigation and in selecting so interesting and attractive a "specimen." He would imagine her as a bug ready for dissection, as in his biological studies. But it would have to be a very pretty bug. So he chose the lady bug.

Perhaps because the girl was pretty, or perhaps because investigations were so interesting, but somehow as the hours sped by the professor no longer noticed the blatant raucous notes of the saxophonist nor how dreadfully out of time the pianist was hammering. Again the hall was empty. The girl noticed it before he did. His ice-cream soda still stood before him untouched, its foamy lather all vanished.

"No, you can't see me home; but I'll be here tomorrow night."

And when the professor crept into bed, restless tossing brought tardy sleep, fitfully interrupted by nervous dreams.

"I declare, Duncan," laughed Mrs. Parminter the next morning as he entered the breakfast room fifteen minutes late, "but you look as if you had never been out before. And—why, Duncan!" she exclaimed, as her eye took in his person; "you're wearing a colored tie!"

He murmured something about being tired of black and appeared reticent to his previous evening's experience, vouchsafing the information that he would again visit the dance hall that evening.

"But Duncan," Mrs. Parminter remonstrated, "I've invited Celia Doane for dinner and you know I did want you to meet her. The investigation can wait. Won't you please be home?"

He walked the block thrice to avoid again being the first in the hall and paid his entrance fee with an air almost of bravado. Seeking his corner, he watched the dancers to find the particular girl, but she was nowhere visible. He circled the hall, colliding with every other couple—but no girl. Why should he be disappointed? Surely she meant nothing to him—he was only watching her as a specimen to include in his report. So he entered in his notebook, "Dance halls create disappointments early in life." Nor did the investigation seem to require attendance the following evening, but as soon as he entered the hall he knew she was there, for he could sense it in his whole body. By an analytical survey he considered the question: Why was he so glad to see her? Just to complete his report. He made his way to her side and she answered the question in his eyes.

"An engagement kept me away last night. I am sorry."

The professor was for overlooking everything; he was glad to see her looking so well this evening. And although the syncopated melodies tempted all feet on the floor, the two sat in the secluded corner and talked what were considered original topics when Adam first saw Eve. She dropped her handkerchief and as both stooped to pick the tiny square of white linen from the floor their heads touched; and somehow—the professor was not thinking of analyses then—their lips met.

The professor was dizzy as he gripped her hands with a wild fear she would escape. He had to confess it. He, Prof. Duncan Parminter, instructor of social and political economy at the Belle Vue seminary, and recently appointed operative of the morals investigation committee, was in love with a public dance hall girl—one who came there unescorted to be picked up—a girl whom he had seen but once before—whose very name he did not know. He took a keen delight in torturing himself with the reflection. Ah, but she was worth it all; one did not catch so fair a specimen every day. Together they would brave the wrath of the world. Tomorrow night she should meet his mother.

And Mrs. Parminter, in exceptional spirits, was quite agreeable to her son's earnest suggestion that one of the subjects of his investigation be permitted to visit them that evening. "And Celia Doane can meet her," she continued. "She will be with us this evening—just the person to understand. What is the girl's name?"

The professor was confused. The fact was, Mrs. Parminter was informed her son could not remember names. But to himself he whispered "Lady Bug."

Evening found him uncomfortably nervous in a dress suit with its bothersome coat-tails; and eagerly he watched the maid as she answered each bell ring. There! At last! That was surely her ring. She would ring just like that! A tiny, gentle, hesitant ring!

But his mother was saying, "So glad to see you, Miss Doane. You can meet my son at last and he has asked one of his specimens to be with us tonight. Come right this way."

Disappointed, the professor, walked over to the window and dejectedly looked down into the dark street. Why hadn't the girl come first? He wanted his mother to meet her alone—so much depended on the first impression. He heard them in the room. Through courtesy he must advance. He turned around, and made a rush for the vision before him! Was she Celia Doane? Mrs. Parminter started in incredulous amazement as her dream hopes were being realized before her very eyes.

"But, Miss Doane, I didn't think you even knew my son!"

"I didn't. The night I inspected the hall he thought me one of the girls," she said, and looking up archly at the professor, who held her very close, she added, "and because I was investigating I never let on. But I didn't suspect he was the professor until—"

"Until—" Mrs. Parminter repeated eagerly.

"Until he told me where to call to meet his mother." Celia hesitated as a deep blush colored cheeks and neck a scarlet red. "I was coming here to meet you as—"

"My specimen!" murmured the professor tenderly.

To Others.

"I know I don't play whist well, but I only play cards for amusement." "Well, your game is certainly amusing."—Boston Transcript.

Playing Better Baseball

Early-season training for baseball is in a sense a misleading expression. The game calls for such all-round physical fitness as no two or three months of training can supply. If you are to be a really good athlete in any form of sport, you must begin to be that kind of athlete in boyhood.

A boy can sometimes do himself mor harm than good by systematic muscle developing exercise. A few seasons ago a prominent pitcher, with great ambition to build up his pitching arm, secretly pulled weights, and used dumb bells and Indian clubs all winter. The result was that he was badly muscle bound in the spring, and was of almost no use through the whole of that year.

The immediate physical training for baseball is much the same as the immediate physical training for any other athletic game. It is the conditioning of the athlete, which means clean living, good food, plenty of exercise each day to start the sweat; a daily bath after exercise; no stimulant or tobacco, and nine hours' sleep with open windows. Some people have the idea that getting into condition is necessarily taking off weight That is true only of those who are fat. Most young athletes are heavier when they are in condition than when they are out of condition. An athlete is in condition when he has a great deal of reserve force, feels boisterously well, feels like being active.

An athlete's food may be almost anything that is wholesome and well cooked. It is a mistake to think that a greatly restricted diet is better than one with plenty of variety. Variety in wholesome food is the best diet that a man can have, so long as every meal represents the four-square rule of a meat, a starch, a green, a sweet. One helping of each dish is the usual rule for quantity, but there is no reason why an athlete should not have two helpings of the main course if he is hungry.

Chew your food. Drink good water at any time, the more frequently the better. It may be unwise for an athlete to drink much cold water while he is at fever heat, but as a rule plenty of water, drunk slowly, is a good conditioner.

Rest is no small part of the process of getting into trim for both body and mind are storing energy when they are not using it. Do not neglect that part of early-season training that consists of nine hours' sleep in an open room every night. It will mean few late theatre parties and dances, but it also means a big difference in your favor two months from now, when the season begins.

If you are now doing some light baseball work in the cage or the gymnasium, remember never to throw a ball hard until you are thoroughly warmed up; it is very easy to strain a tendon. Especially do not throw snowballs; you may spoil your arm for good.

Color and Horse Character

An old cavalry officer says that one may judge the constitution and character of a horse from its color. Bright chestnuts and light bays are high spirited, but nervous and delicate. Dark chestnuts and glossy blacks are hardy and more tempered. Rich bays have great spirit, but are teacheable. Dark and iron grays are hardy and sound, while light grays are the opposite.

Roans, either strawberry or blue, are the hardiest, and best working of all, even tempered, easiest to train, taking kindly to everything. Rusty blacks are distinguished for their pig-headedness. A horse's "white stockings" give another clue to character. A horse with one white leg is a bad one, with two its temper is uncertain, with three it is absolutely safe, with four may be trusted for a while only. —Answers, London.

Economy in Grain Feeding the Dairy Cow

(Experimental Farm Note)

The greatest factor in the economical grain feeding of the dairy cow, other than the ability of the cow to use her grain ation economically. is the supply of ome grown roughages and grain feeds vailable on the farm. The roughages re of importance, for the richer, more succulent and more abundant they are the less grain feeding is necessary to secure the maximum milk flow from the cows. The home grown grain feeds are of equal importance, for they can be grown much more cheaply than they can be purchased, the quality is known, and the greater the supply grown, the smaller the capital outlay in commercial feeds.

In growing grains on the farm to feed to dairy cattle, the farmer must of necessity stick to the class of grains that will work in with the rotation of crops. For this purpose oats can hardly be excelled and they are, as well, one of the best of grains for dairy cattle feeding. Another grain that works into a rotation very well, particularly as a nurse crop when seeding down a field, is barley. Greater use could be made of this grain in combination with oats in the dairy cow's ration. Where it is not desired to keep the various classes of grain separate, a very good yielding mixture, and a very good feeding mixture, is found in peas, oats, and barley. provided the selection of varieties is made so that they will ripen as near the same time as possible.

The farmer who has an abundance of good roughage, such as clover hay and silage or roots (preferably both,) together with a supply of above mentioned graing, will be in position to feed his dairy cows both well and economically. He will, however. require some purchased grain feeds so to belance the ration for his cows that they will have a sufficient quantity of protein. If the feeder had the choice of but one grain food (luckily he has many to choose from) he would be well advised to choose wheat bran to balance the ration. It is so largely sold that it almost forms a standard of values for other feeds and is consequently practically always economical to buy. When we add to this its many qualities as a feed, such as high protein content; low fibre content; laxative and tonic qualities; palatability; and its bulkiness, it will readily be appreciated why it is always given a prominent place in the dairy cow's ration. Other standard grain feeds which are most useful in balancing a home grown grain ration, are oilcake and cottonseed meals. To many these grains seem extremely high priced but when we consider the purpose for which they are bought, namely to supply protein. they are the cheapest feeds that can be got unless that the price is relatively very high indeed. If their residual value as manure is considered and it is no mean consideration—then they take first place as cheap protein feeds. Furthermore the grades of these commodities showing the highest protein content, even though somewhat higher in price than the others, are the most economical to buy.

Another factor in economical feeding is the proportion in which the various grains mentioned should be included in the ration This will depend to a certain extent on conditions. If there is a superabundance of the home grown grains, the proportion of the purchased grains could be cut down accordingly without materially affecting the balance of the ration. If alfalfa and clover hays are abundant in the ration the rich protein grains may also be reduced and the desired balance retained. If, on the other hand, there is a lack of these protein roughages and they are subitituted by others such as timothy hay or straw, then more of the protein-rich grains are required to retain the protein balance which, it may be well to state, will under these conditions be retained at a loss. The following grain mixture, with above variations, will be found economical; bran 3 parts, oats 4 parts, barley 1 to 2 parts, oilcake or cottonseed meal 2 parts, or 1 part of each.

The rate at which this mixture is fed is another factor in economical feeding. It has been found from experiments involving close calculation, that a safe rule to follow is to feed one pound of the grain mixture to every 3 pounds of milk produced in the case of fresh and especially productive cows; one pound to every 4 pounds of milk produced for the cows well on in their lactation periods, together with those naturally less productive; and one pound to every 5 pounds of milk produced with the cows that are winding up their lactation periods. In other words the amount fed must be arrived at by the joint action of the milk scales, the milk tester, the feed scales, and the judgment of the feeder.

An American bishop was describing the "bad place" to a congregation of cadets.

"Friends," he said, "You've seen molton iron running out of a furnace, haven't you? It comes out white hot, sizzling and hissing. Well——"

The preacher pointed a long lean finger at the lads.

"Well," he continued, "they use that stuff for ice cream in the place I have been speaking of."

Her funeral was held Monday afternoon at the home where she passed away, being conducted by Rev. R. J. Glassford.

On Sunday last Rev. A.J. Sinclair the newly inducted pastor of the Presbyterian congregation, preached forceful sermons in inauguration of his pastorate, strengthening the view held by the congregation when the call was made, that it would be very much to the advantage of the Church if Mr. Sinclair could be induced to become the pastor. Running through both sermons on Sunday could be discerned an urgent appeal for the welfare of the young people which evidently Mr. Sinclair has much at heart.
