As we move to our new location on Laurier Drive, our special thanks are to those who have contributed to the building structure that will ohuse our re-located operations — the Consulting Engineers, Messrs S. G. Chipman & Co., Limited of London, Ontario, the General Contractors, Messrs Angus L. MacDonald Limited of Cornwall, and some sixteen sub-contractors who have been associated in this building.

We are also indebted to our loyal and efficient employees who have helped to minimize production disturbances during our removal operations and who have done a remarkable job in the face of many problems.

Moving to a new location brings back a host of happy memories associated with our successful operations in two separate buildings in Morrisburg. We have been blessed with wonderful neighbours who have been kind and co-operative. Many of our original employees lived in the immediate neighbourhood. It is with sincere appreciation that we recall the years of the past that have meant a great deal to us. We will miss the friendly atmosphere of our previous locations where our neighbours were our helpful friends. As we look forward, it is our hope that the future will be as good to all those associated with us, and to the citizens of Morrisburg, as the past has been.

OPEN HOUSE—

When our operations are on a normal basis, we are looking forward to being able to invite all our friends to visit the new factory and see the array of automatic machines in full production. There will a public announcement and invitation, and the time will be publicized. May we ask your indulgence meanwhile as we are trying to get back to regular production.

NOTICE OF SUBDIVISION CONTROL BY-LAW TOWNSHIP OF WILLIAMSBURG

Please note that the Township of Williamsburg has passed a Subdivision Control By-Law similar to those in effect in all neighbouring municipalities and that this By-Law affects all lands in the Township of Williamsburg, in Concession One (1), Two (2) and Three (3) and also all lands included in Township Lots Twenty-eight (28) to Thirty-three (33) both inclusive in each of the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh and Eighth Concessions of the Township.

This By-Law provides in brief that where land in the area affected is to be sold it must be described in accordance with a Registered Plan of Subdivision or in the alternative the consent of the Township Planning Board must be obtained. It further provides that where land is within a Registered Plan of Subdivision, such as the new Subdivision in the First Concession of East Williamsburg, the owner cannot sell a part of a Lot, as distinguished from the whole of the Lot, without the consent of the Planning Board.

These provisions do not apply in the following cases:

1. If the land is all the land owned by the seller.

2. If the land being sold is at least Ten (10) acres in area and the part remaining to the seller is also at least Ten (10) acres in area.

This By-Law is not passed in order to stop the growth of the area but on the contrary is to promote its orderly growth for the benefit both of the sellers and of those people who buy lots from them and will be future residents of the Township. It is becoming universal throughout all the municipalities of the Province where any sudden growth is developing and in particular a similar By-Law is already in effect in Osnabruck, Morrisburg, Iroquois and Matilda. The full by-law may be inspected at the office of the Clerk or at the Registry Office in Morrisburg. It was registered on August 12th, 1957 and takes effect as of that date.

KEITH SCHELL,
Clerk.

HOG PRODUCERS CHARGE DISCRIMINATION BY PACKERS

A discriminatory two-rate system for the transportation of hogs has now emerged in Ontario as a result of packer under-the-table payment to transporters, Charles McInnis, president of the Ontario Hog Producers' Association, has charged.

'.Our marketing agency now finds that transporters delivering to one of Ontario's larger cities' charges a rate of $1.00 if the hogs are delivered directly to the packing plant in that city. If however, the hogs are to be delivered to the assembly point of the Ontario Hog Producers' Co-operative in that same city, the rate is $1.40 per hog", Mr. McInnis said.

"This practice of charging two rates is illegal in some segments of Ontario's transportation industry. Yet, such a practice is being carried on in the transportation of hogs" Mr. McInnis said. "Practices of this nature permit the transporter to favour some companies and discriminate against other companies which in effect places the transporter in an unusual and unethical position to affect a company's business."

"What makes this two-rate system particularly undesireable", he added, "is that it not only discriminates against our organization in favour of direct-dealing packers; but it also encourages direct delivery, and this works against the movement of hogs onto the open market where they can be exposed to competitive bidding", Mr. McInnis.

"With the evidence which we now have in hand", Mr. McInnis concluded, "we intend to draw the matter to the attention of our annual meeting of September 10th. It is probable that the meeting might advise that the government be asked to investigate this two-rate practice of hog transporters".

ANNE HIRST
Your Family Counselor

"Dear Anne Hirst: Nursing my ill mother brought on a breakdown six years ago, and when I recovereed I moved to my married brother's home, where I improved. I would have stayed but his wife made it intolerable — to get rid of me, she confessed later. I wanted her to like me, so the worse she became the kinder I was. I worked part-time, paid my board, helped with the housework and the children, and did my own cooking and laundry, but I was so miserable my mother made me consult a psychiatrist, which made me more despondent.

"Now I am back just where I started, physically, emotionally and spiritually ill. My faith in everybody is failing; I see others, selfish and cruel, who are healthy and contented. I've done my best to be good and kind, and all I've got is poor health and misery and an abnormal life.

"I know you cannot have any solution but I've got to tell somebody, and I'll certainly appreciate any comment you may print.

DESPONDENT"

FAITH HELPS

* It is hard to believe that you, an intelligent young woman pursued by trouble and confusion, will let yourself be defeated by circumstances you cannot change. Where is your self-respect? Everything depends on your will to overcome these supersensitive tendencies that plague you. First, in my opinion, you need a guiding hand to point the first few steps ahead, and it is likely that is all you require just now.

* I urge you to talk this over frankly with your minister. He will show you how to regain self-confidence, and give you positive assurance that we are not goven burdens we are too weak to carry. Regular church attendance and a firm belief in the power of prayer have brought peace to many a troubled soul and renewed their faith in themselves and all mankind. With your minister's help, it. should do the same for you.

* He can suggest activities within the church that will lift you out of your sea of troubles and open your eyes to the importance of being a friend. You will meet some people worse off than you; in helping them you will forget your own difficulties and taste the joy of service and the satisfaction of feeling needed.

* As to your sister-in-law, she is as she is. Certain temperaments can never assimilate with opposites, and it is the victim who makes allowances and suffers without bitterness. You have made encouraging progress toward that goal and if you build an armor about yourself her slurs will lose their sting.

* Perhaps your mother (or your minister) knows some nearby family who will welcome you as a paying guest; there you could know a normal, perhaps affectionate, family life and should make long strides toward a happier outlook on the world you live in. The idea may repel you at the moment, but it is worth considering.

* Meantime, seek help through faith. Cultivate an interest in other people. If you will yourself to, you can dig yourself out of this self-pitying slough into a useful and richer life. My earnest good wishes.

WISE MOTHER

"Dear Anne Hirst: I am 16, and going with a boy my age. Rumors have been going around high school just before it closed that he and some others have been visiting the house of a girl who everybody talks about.

"I asked him about it and he denied it. He has never told me anything but the truth. His family are nice people and he has always behaved himself with me.

"Mother wants me to break up immediately and I can't bring myself to do it because I like him too much. What do you say?

CONFUSED"

* Unless the rumors have been proved false, you should stop seeing the boy promptly. Where smoke is seen there's usually a fire nearby, and no nice girl can continue to associate with a lad implicated with a girl of no repitition. with a girl of no reputation. if she does, her own good name suffers.

* If your friend is innocent he should find a way to reassure your mother. Until he does, I agree with her.

* I understand why you believe in him, but you are too inexperienced in the ways of the world to realize that the lad may be the perfect gentleman with you, yet sow his wild oats with a cheap girl. Your mother knows this, and would protect you from gossip.

* It is always shocking to learn that someone we like erred but if the boy is not guilty, why was his name included?

When life and love have let you down, turn for comfort to that understanding unseen friend, Anne Hirst. Her sympathy and wisdom will throw their light on your darkened path and help guide you toward peace. Address her at Box 1, 123 Eighteenth St., New Toronto.

One Year Of Life Spent On 'Phone

When you make a 'phone call you're REALLY moving . . . around 186,000 miles per second in fact, at least, that's the speed your voice is travelling. And furthermore, you're probably going to spend a whole year out of your life on that telephone . . . about 8,760 hours. Staggering? Not when you think how many hours it saves you. You can be an armchair shopper . . . call the folks miles away . . . chat with friends the other side of town .. reach the doctor, police, fire department . . . all through the magic of your telephone.

Dental bills in Canada run over 70 million dollars a year. There is only one dentist to every 3,000 Canadians. Fluoridation of communal water supplies has reduced tooth decay by as much as 69 per cent in some areas. Fluoridation has been recommended by leading authorities, but has been blocked by misinformed people.

CHRONICLES OF GINGER FARM
by Gwendoline P. Clarke

Locally, the big news this week is centred around centennials—Centennials at Milton and at Oakville—in both of which we are slightly involved. We didn't get to the official opening of either but on Saturday we went to Milton and saw the big parade. The rest of our family was there including our three grandsons. It was really a wonderful parade with floats and antique vehicles, bands, Indians from the Brantford Reserve, war veterans, guides, scouts, fire brigade, town council, 4-H Clubs, and of course, the inevitable Beauty Queen. Usually one parade is much like another but there seemed to be something a little different about this one — it showed more imagination and ingenuity than most. For instance, there was an old democrat drawn by a team of mules. Where they got them from I don't know for mules these days are few and far between—that is, the four-footed variety; the two-legged type are not quite so scarce. Probably the young people had never seen a democrat but in the old days it was the favorite conveyance for taking the family to church.

There was a genuine old stage coach that had already been touring various towns, cities and villages advertising the Milton Centennial. Its passengers were dressed in 19th century costumes and really looked the part. There was also a covered wagon, complete with pioneer settlers and their children just as they must have appeared a hundred years ago. Possibly a few details were not quite perfect but the effect was the same. There were genuine old-type fire reels followed by others comparable to the changing years.

It took about an hour for the entire parade to pass the spot where we were standing so that is surely an indication of its size and length. There were, of course, a number of clowns and I am beginning wonder if clowns are such a good idea. Some of our former neighbors were with us, among them a five-year-old girl. Mary is absolutely terrified of clowns. At one Santa Claus parade a clown came up and took her hand and she was almost petrified. This time directly she saw clowns on the road she started to scream and ran off and hid behind a car. There she stayed throughout the parade. She just wouldn't come near the road again. David wasn't too happy about the clowns either but he stood his ground. Plenty of other children I noticed were more or less scared too so I am wondering if something couldn't be done to change the situation. Couldn't they be required to stay in the middle of the road where their antics would probably amuse but not frighten the children. It is the close approach of the clowns that scares the little ones. I felt so sorry for Mary, missing all the fun because of her fear of the clowns.

Before we watched the parade we went up to Ginger Farm and found the house occupied by a young couple with four small children. They had moved in only the day before so of course they were only half unpacked. But, oh dear, the things that happen when a place is left unoccupied. Plants and shrubs had been lifted and taken away. And, in spite of the fact that the house had been boarded up, the motor and parts of the water pressure system had been taken away. And yet, in all the time we were living there, we could be away all day, leaving the place unlocked and nothing was ever touched or stolen.

We were glad to find someone in the house because they have already adopted Joe. Poor Black Joe was a problem. He was such a nervous cat we knew he would never settle down in new surroundings so we left him to his old haunts but went up once a week to take him food, which, incidentally, he never seemed to want. He was fat and in good condition but we thought it would finally be necessary to have him mercifully put to sleep before the cold weather came around again. Now we don't need to worry. The family has a cat and Joe has a family.

On Sunday we went to Oakville for the day and Bob and family took us to see the unveiling of an addition to the Cenotaph and the ceremonial parade of seven bands, headed by the Lorne Scots with their kilts and bagpipes, with the usual following of veterans and others. That is something we really enjoy, although it makes one's heart ache to see the brave showing the "vets" put on, particularly the "old sweats" of World War I, some of them limping and shuffling and doing their best to hide it, trying to keep step with the military music — still defenders of the Commonwealth at heart, brave testimony to the fact that "old soldiers never die."

Today I take my part as grandmother on a float representing our Scotch Block Women's Institute. I feel quite qualified to take that part!

French High Fashion Creator Really Puts On Le Chien

PARIS—(NEA)—Twenty years ago a 40-year-old Spaniard, Cristobal Balenciaga, put up his shingle in the swanky Avenue George V and went into the High Fashion business. Today Balenciaga is considered by most people in the business as the greatest creator of women's fashions in history.

He has also been called the "designers' designer" for the very good reason that most of the silhouettes and trends he has launched have influenced the world of fashion.

This he has accomplished with practically no publicity. He happens not to believe in its power. Last year he decided that fashion writers would not be allowed to see his collection until four weeks after he had shown to the buyers. People held their breath and wondered whether the man was big enough to be so independent. Balenciaga is still in business as Paris prepares for another opening.

He was born in a fishing village called Guetaria, near San Sebastian. His father was a sea captain, his mother a dressmaker. She worked for some of the ladies of the Spanish court who spent the summer in the then fashinable resort.

At 10 he created his first model — a coat for his dog, complete with set-in sleeves. He learned his first lesson in the "architecture" of dress when the pup ran off and the garment burst at all the seams.

But both papa and mama agreed their son was a born dressmaker and at 14 they sent him to Barcelona as apprentice to a fashionable tailor.

Two years later he had managed to save the third-class fare to Paris. He decided then that one day he would have a fashion house of his own in Paris. He achieved his dream 24 years later.

From the day of its opening the Paris house flourished, even through the war years. Today he employs some 350 workgirls, 20 saleswomen and 6 mannequins. The world's best-dressed women and the most important American and European buyers have passed through his salons where the decorations have scarcely changed in 20 years.

It has been said that a woman does not go to the house of Balenciaga just to buy clothes. She is likened to a priestess who takes part in a sacred rite. And those who come to see his collection out of curiosity are soon discouraged by the indifferent, to say distant attitude of his staff.

Balenciaga creates primarily for the carriage trade, ignores current trends. Every year silhouettes are launched which liken women to insects, plants, flowers or letters of the alphatricks so popular with Christian to emphasize their personality. Dior. His aim is to clothe women bet. Balenciaga disdains these This is probably one of the reasons why he chooses mannequins who, when not frankly ugly, are definitely impersonal. They stalk through the long, narrow salons almost "at the double" and make one think of Amazons who must have parked their javelins just behind the silk curtain through which they appear.

This season like every season it is anybody's guess what he will do with waistlines and hemset the former where it normally lines for fall and winter. As a matter of record, he has never should be—but always a few inches above or below. As for hemlines, he plays with them like a cat with a mouse. Last season he startled observers by showing several skirts which just barely covered the knees.

"Fashion should never be static," declares Balenciaga. "To create you must be something of an architect—for proportions—a painter—for color range—with a little of the poet and the musician to visualize a woman when she walks, moves or dances."

Who are the women who buy Balenciaga? Not necessarily only millionaires' wives. Many fashion-conscious women consider it a sound investment to buy one suit or one evening dress, knowing that it will be in fashion for at least two. if not three years. Besides the timeless quailty there is also the assurance of perfect execution.

The apostle of simplicity—although he says that a simple dress can look positively vulgar on a woman if it is not her style —lets his imagination run riot in some of his evening gowns. It is here that the Spanish background emerges in dramatic "infanta" gowns or dresses that might have stepped down from a Goya painting. Balenciaga is the one man who can impart a sort of glow to a dead-black dress.

Only Balenciaga can afford to show the extravagant, often ridiculous and defintely unbecoming hats which accompany his models and which he seems to have created with his tongue in his chek. But here again, the probability is that the towering flower pots, lampshades, space helmets or "circus" headpieces with waving feathers or abstract bits of nonsense will be found the following season to have influenced the thinking of Parisian modistes.

TYPICAL BALENCIAGA MAGIC is a $30,000 necklace to hold the drape of this flesh-pink flecked organza bodice of a short evening dress. His best trick, however, is showing styles to buyers four weeks before the press gets a look.

WEDDING DAY — Cleveland Indian's pitcher Herb Score and his bride, the former Nancy McNamara, smile after their marriage. The southpaw's right eye showed no signs of the injury he received when he was hit by a line drive in a game with the Yankees.

Secret of The Fabulous Lady Decker

"I haven't a million," claims Lady Docker, "I never have had a million!" Once, when asked how much money she had, she confessed, "About £150,000—and that's better than a slap in the face with a wet fish."

Of course, nobody is particularly interested in the precise sum lovely Norah Docker is worth. The world is content to have her just as she is—ecstatically demonstrating how to play marbles slapping faces at Monte Carlo and always fabulously blending caviare and controversy.

It is common knowledge, however that her first husband left £177,500 and that her second husband left £955,000. Death duties depleted these fortunes, but they may have been retrieved since then by shrewd investments.

Twice widowed, Norah Docker has known heartbreak as well as happiness. She also has known what it is to toil in a shop, selling hats, for fifty shillings a week.

Maybe that is the secret of her vivid appeal. Even before she had money, she was afraid of nobody and nothing. Now that she has cash, her unconventional fun daunts the acid brigade.

There was that wonderful occasion when Lady Docker visited a coal mine and afterwards told the miners, "Now you must come to see me!"

Sure enough, thirty-three cloth-capped straight-talking colliery workers were duly ushered aboard Sir Bernard Docker's luxury yacht Shemara, the largest British private yacht registered at Lloyd's.

"It's a simple ship, really," Norah Docker explained, as she showed her guests around the opulent staterooms, the seven tiled bathrooms and the deep-carpeted lounge with its huge, open fireplace. She knew they would thoroughly enjoy this private peek.

Liberally they feasted on salmon and lobster, cold roast pheasant, three saddles of lamb, a baron of beef, game pie, chicken and duck. The English Channel was afterwards littered with scores of empty champagne bottles.

Perhaps the highlight of the occasion was the delightful spectacle of Lady Docker herself, in bell-bottom slacks, dancing a hornpipe while the guests roared applause and Sir Bernard beamed bland approval.

She made a host of friends, also, when she answered the challenge issued by the girls of a Yorkshire factory's marble team.

Wearing a glamorous gown of peacock blue for the "reet do," Norah showed unexpected ability to win a decisive nineteen points to twelve, and became unofficial women's marble champion of the world.

One can have nothing but admiration for the way Lady Docker rallied to her husband's cause during the B.S.A. controversy. She autographed more than ten thousand photographs of herself to accompany letters she sent to stockholders.

The fabulous Norah gained immense popularity but shocked the snobs by signing autograph-books at the Royal Ascot race meeting.

"If it gives a little happiness," she said defiantly, "I don't care what some people think." And she startled millions of viewers when she appeared on the television screen wearing jewellery that looked like a queen's ransom. "What do you think?" she bubbled. "It cost only £3, 4s. 3d."

Lady Docker believes that a woman's first duty is to be a woman, and look as glamorous as she can afford to.

Most people find her gaiety quite infectious, and she makes it very evident that she thoroughly enjoys being a Cinderella of real life.

To understand Norah Docker you have to remember that her father died when she was only sixteen, and that she and her mother faced a bitter struggle to keep things going.

They had to move from their big house at Edgbaston, and young Norah Turner helped her mother run a small hotel. Hard times continued and Norah thought they could do better in London.

It was during the dance-mad 'twenties, and Norah fancied her chances as a professional dance teacher. She spent far more than she could afford on a course of lessons with Santos Casani. "Norah was my best dancer," he recalled. His ambitious pupil, however, soon discovered that there were far too many dance teachers and too few pupils.

Living with her mother in a tiny flat in Bayswater, Norah knew what it was to be uncomfortably poor. She took a job in a big department store, selling hats, with a sales commission of a penny in the pound.

She was told there was a store rule that girls of the staff should wear brown dresses. Determined to look smart, Norah splurged on a brown satin frock — only to discover that store dresses had to be of brown cotton or wool.

"You will have to go unless you follow the rules," Norah was reminded.

"I've gone!" she retorted.

For a time she worked in a little gown shop in Birmingham, and maybe she was just one of many girls dreaming that one day they might marry millionaires.

Norah didn't marry a millionaire. She was twenty-eight when, at a party, she met Clem Callingham, a director of a wine firm. The couple fell deeply in love, and soon were married.

Their marriage lasted for seven years, affording perfect happiness, and they had a son, Lance. During the war Norah drove an ambulance, but apart from that her only interests in life were her husband and her son

Norah was stunned with deep grief when Clem died. But he had told her: "If anything happens to me, you should remarry."

He had introduced her to Sir William Collins, who had lost his own wife only two years before. The widow and the widower found companionship in their mutual grief, and they were married; but the union of these two lonely people was to prove tragically brief, for Sir William died a year later.

The gay Lady Docker remembers how, in those days, she used to cry herself to sleep. Her life entirely changed once more, however, when she met Sir Bernard at a charity dance.

The Collins money had come from jam, pickles, tobacco, a department store and other investments. Bernard had inherited an estimated £3,000,000 from his father, chief of a railway car company; and he had married a film actress, but divorced her in 1934. Thus Norah had not always been rich and Bernard had not always been happy.

Norah knew that Bernard was the man for her when she saw him come home one day from a shooting expedition, with his arm affectionately round her sons' shoulder. It was the boy himself who asked them whether they wanted to marry.

To-day young Lance is the focus of the family. Lady Docker is not ashamed to live the full life that is every woman's secret dream. And Sir Bernard indulgently shares the fun with the air of a man who knows deep, inward tranquility.

One For The Book

Authors often conceal a "story" in their book dedications. For, as Robert Louis Stevenson said, every book is, in an intimate sense, a circular letter to the friends of the person who writes it. And on this the public is but a generous patron who pays the postage.

Perhaps the luckiest author ever, through his choice of dedication, was Joao de Barros, a sixteenth-century Portuguese historian. In dedicating a book to his royal master, King Joao III, he received as his reward the entire province of Maranhao, part of Brazil. Thus, through a stroke of the pen, he acquired lordship over a territory 177,000 square miles in extent, approximately the size of France.

Not even the richest-paid authors of modern times, like Ernest Hemingway or Somerset Maugham, have even got within shouting distance of earning a kingdom for a book, much less for a dedication!

EASY ANSWER

A man browsing in a pet shop was asked by an attractive young clerk if she could assist him.

"Well," the customer replied, "I'm thinking of getting a pet for a client of mine. He is a semi-invalid; can't go out. Man about 60; very wealthy; nice chap. He has no relatives — so the idea of a pet came to me."

The girl considered — then brightening, said, "I think I have just the thing!"

"Good!" said the man. "What kind of pet do you suggest?"

Replied the young lady: "Me!"

"A little over-weight, dear?" inquired Mr. Henpeck of his wife as she stepped off the machine.

"No," she replied, "it's just that according to this chart I should be six inches taller."

The Men Who Make Up Our Minds

NEW YORK — While Vance Packard has gone home to work on a new book, Madison Avenue —the mother-ulcer of the nation's advertising industry — is still trying to digest his first book without gagging.

It's called "The Hidden Persuaders" and describes in minute detail how we are being sold one brand instead of another, one candidate instead of another, one point of view instead of another.

Why, asks Packard (who knows the answers), do cars keep getting longer and longer? Why are men's clothes becoming feminized? How do supermarkets sell 25 per cent more than the shopper needs?

On and on the questions roll. And the answer, according to this study, is because merchandisers, ad men, publicists are applying the findings of Motivational Research.

MR is psychology applied to selling. And Motivational Researchers are depth men whose philosophy, according to one of their trade journals, says: "In very few instances do people really know what they want, even when they say they do."

For the most part, behind our specific purchases and points of view are unconscious and irrational motivating factors. For example, Packard cites "the drive to conformity, the need for oral stimulation, yearning for security."

Once these vulnerable points are isolated, he explains, the psychological hooks are baited and placed in the merchandising sea for the unwary consumer who has no way to defend himself.

Under chapter headings like: Marketing Eight Hidden Needs; The Built-In Sexual Overtone; Babes In Consumerland; The Packaged Soul; etc., Packard points to product after product and campaign after campaign which MR has successfully sold to us.

"They're not selling products much anymore," Packard said about his findings. "Today, one brand is often about the same as another. So the merchandisers have to sell us as people. It's inhuman and dangerous."

Ready confirmation of his conclusion is available to most working newsmen in the morning mail. A publicity release by a cigar firm, for example, proclaims that it has hired a good-looking woman to "glamorize" cigars so that women will buy them and younger men will smoke them.

And an item from Blank Art Studios who supply much of the art you see in ads explains that they "have been giving a lot more emphasis to the people rather than the product in the ad."

Even qualified market reporters find themselves baffled by what people say about a product before they buy it. Here's a news report on a new automobile style: "You may not like the looks of this car . . . but the public is going for it—big!"

In both subtle and obvious ways, Packard said, we're being exploited in our unconscious: our hopes, fears, dreams — places where we have no defense.

In order to get at these feelings, Packard found, MR people have called on college professors of psychology and sociology to devise depth questionnaires and tests that will by-pass conscious guards.

"It's getting to the place," according to Kenneth Schwartz, an expert market reporter, "where if you want to interview a college professor, you have to look for him at supermarket openings."

But one psychology professor at an eastern college who has been ignored by MR firms said wistfully: "Of course I'd be glad to consult with these researchers. I understand they pay very well."

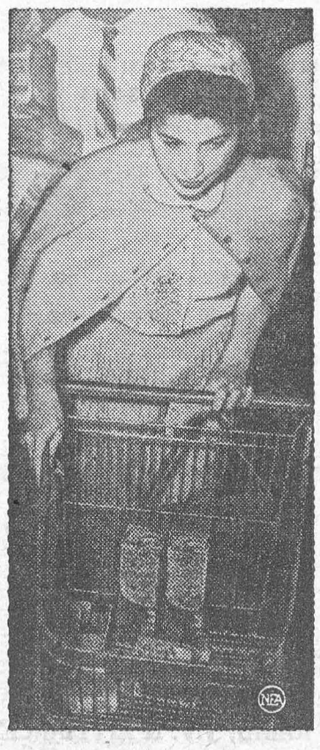
They charge very well. It costs a medium-sized ad agency about $1,500 for a day-and-a-half consultation. And with each new MR success, the fee climbs.

About the only thing, Packard said, that can pull the frightening structure down is awareness by the consumer of what the merchandisers are doing to him with MR.

And ad men are frankly worried that "The Hidden Persuaders" will do just that. The book is selling at the rate of 1,000 per week and as one Madison Avenue man said, "How can you tell who's erading it? If it's just us ad men, it's okay. But what if it's a consumer?"

Packard sadly admitted his own fear that the middle majority——the market which MR manipulates — does not read books like this.

"About the best I can hope for," he said, "is that the MR people and the advertising men will read it and discover a sense of morality and responsibility toward the unaware consumers who can't defend themselves against the exploitation of their unconscious."



BY THE TIME her supermarket trip is done, MR will have sold her 25 per cent more than she needs—or wants.

Highway Eyewash

A pat argument used by members of Congress opposed to billboard controls is that only esthetes are concerned about turning the new 41,000 miles of Federal highway into a garish jungle of billboards and neon-lit hot dog eateries. Yet among the chief opponents of unregulated billboards are highway engineers — hardy known as an arty-arty group — who rightly point to certain safety hazards posed by confusing signs on a speedway. We further suspect that many a motorist whose closest approach to the fine arts is watching a wrestling match will take loud offense if he sees more soapflake placards than sunsets on his first vacation tour on the new highways. — Washington Post.

This scene is duplicated all too often on a bright, pleasant Sunday afternoon. Many of the elements of highway tragedy are here. The smashed cars — the news photographers — curious passersby. You can smell, almost the funmes of dripping gasoline and hot engine oil. You can hear (almost) the keening of ambulance sirens. But this is no accident. It is a carefully staged wreck, made to occur on a test track at the UCLA engineering laboratory to study the effects of head-on collision. Place yourself mentally in the driver's seat of either car, for a moment, before you take a chance on the highway. Each of these vehicles was going "only" 55 miles an hour when they hit.

If you are doing any warm-weather entertaining, gelatin for salad molds, crumb crusts for refrigerator pies, or some other dessert that can be made and refrigerated 24 hours or so before serving are a real help. Or if you don't want to cook at the last moment, a chicken loaf be be baking in your oven for the last hour before the party and whisked onto the table hot at the last minute.

Here's a chicken and rice loaf recipe you'll like. It bakes at 350° F. for I hour. Use a 2-quart ring mold, a large bread-loaf pan or any special loaf pan you like. Brush inside of pan with melted fat before pouring mixture into pan. Allow loaf to stay in pan 10 minutes after taking from oven, then loosen edges and sides with spatula. Put platter over pan; use both hands to turn loaf onto platter.

HOT CHICKEN AND RICE LOAF

1 stewing chicken (4 pounds ready-to-cook weight)
2 teaspoons salt
1½ cups raw rice, cooked
1 teaspoon salt
¼ cup chopped pimiento
1 teaspoon paprika
4 eggs, beaten
¼ cup chicken fat, skimmed from broth
2 cups chicken broth
1 cup milk

Cook chicken with 2 teaspoons salt the day before you want to make the loaf. Pour broth in covered container. Cool quickly. Keep in refrigerator. Remove chicken meat from bones and cut into ½- to 1-inch cubes. Keep in refrigerator.

Combine the chicken, 4 cups cooked rice, and all other ingredients as listed. Stir to blend well. Pack mixture into greased pan. Bake at 350° F. for 1 hour. Serves 8-10.

Season and thicken 2 cups chicken broth and serve as sauce for loaf.

Follow Basic Rules For Safe Vacation

To ensure a healthy, happy holiday it pays to follow a few basic rules:

2. Take the sun in easy doses . . . sunburn is a real burn.
3. Be sure your summer water supply is pure and your vacation milk supply is pasteurized . . . if not, pasteurize it yourself.
4. Avoid over-exertion, particularly if you are unaccustomed to strenuous exercise.

When a man is pushing 60, that's exercise enough.

Happy Motoring With Small Fry

If you're taking very young children on a motor trip, load suitcases on the floor of the back seat until they are level with the seat. Place a mattress across this area, with blankets and pillows, providing both a play area and a comfortable place to sleep.

A space-saving is to hang a plastic shor wardrobe over the back of the car's front seat so that compartments face the rear. This holds toys and necessary incidentals . . . one being a paper bag for litter.

Items in the glove compartment of the car should include sun glasses for tired little eyes, sunburn preventative, a first aid kit and a damp washcloth and soap in a plastic bag.

TV Art Lessons For Housewives

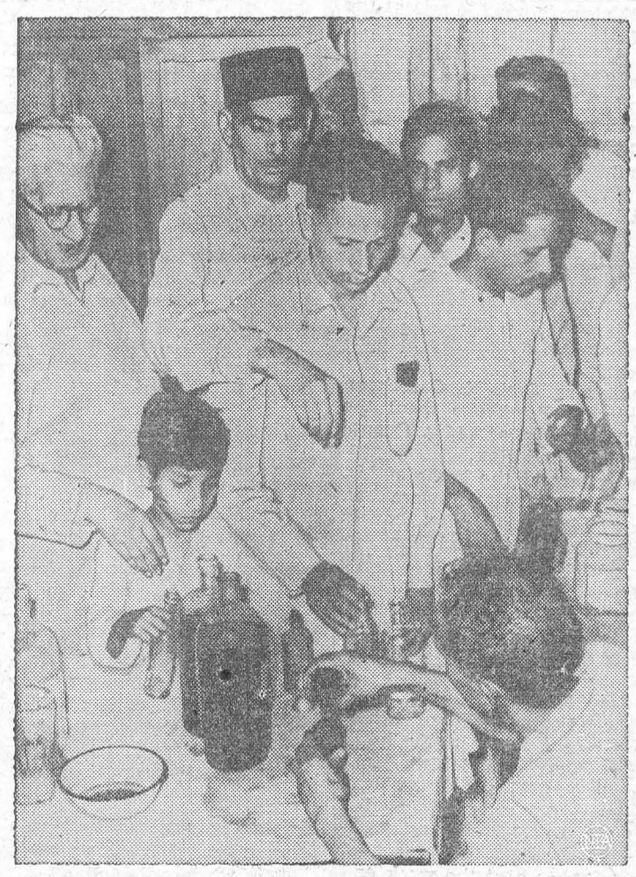
The French TV network has launched a program to teach housewives with time on their hands, how to paint pictures. The idea stemmed from earlier success of cooking lessons via TV.

Viewers receive three afternoon classes a week. Georges Labaille, a well-known art teacher, is in charge but he often presents guest stars from the Paris art world, to offer words of encouragement to the aspiring painters in their kitchen aprons.

It is estimated that 20 per cent of the persons watching the programs have their easels in front of them and are painting right along with the teacher.

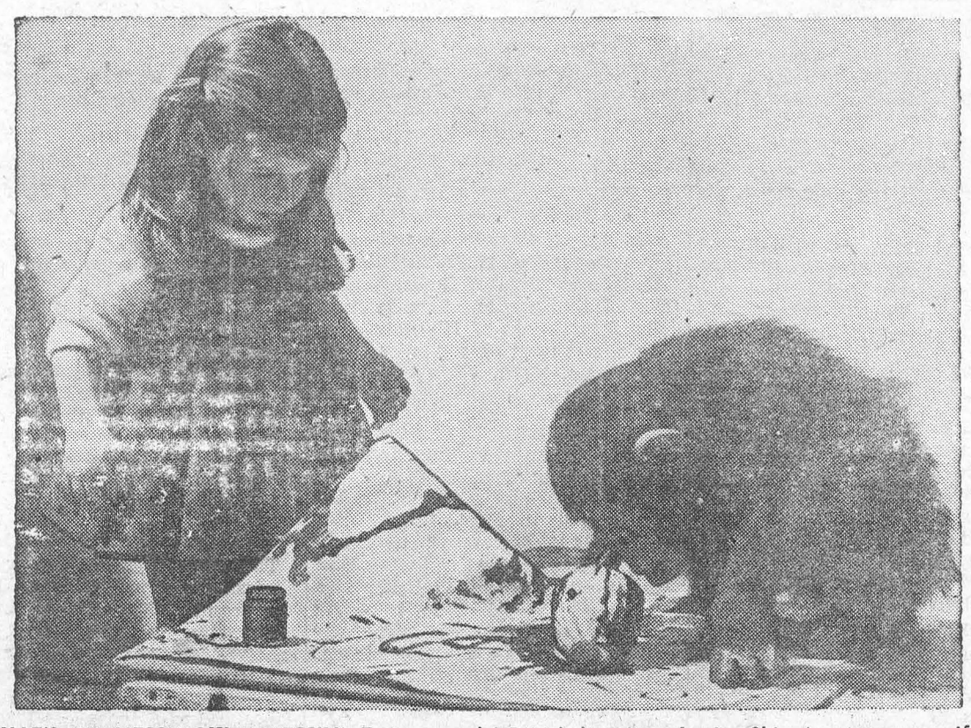
Cool Drinks Win

Serve simple cool drinks and you'll be a winner! Grape juice is a good old standby. Just combine one medium bottle of juice with enough sugar syrup to sweeten. Add half cupful of lemon juice and chill. Just before serving add one quart of ginger ale and serve six satisfied customers.



VIRUS VICTIMS — These residents of Delhi, India, some of the 35,000 in the Delhi area stricken with Oriental influenza, crowd into a dispensary for treatment. First detected in north China in January, the virus has raged through the entire Far East. With cases showing up in European cities and among travelers returning to America, world health officials fear further spread and are waging an all-out war against it. Known as Mutant A—it changes its nature—the flu has resisted modern miracle durgs. Few deaths have been reported, though millions have been stricken.

FEMAIL MAN — Learning her new duties down to the last letter, this would-be postman, not yet in uniform, trundles her "trolley" from house-to-house in The Hague, Holland, under the watchful eye of a regular mailman. Owing to a shortage of male personnel, Dutch postal authorities are recruiting women for the letter-lugging job. The postwomen will be issued "trolleys" to make their job easier.



THAT'S MY MESS YOU'RE MESSIN'—Two-year-old British lass Peta Louise Skingley appears miffed because chimp "Congo" has his fist in the paintpot, spilling colors over the young lady's surrealistic effort. Peta simply shouldn't paint at the London zoo.

Toothpaste Saved Sailor's Life

Tony Mendoza was dying. All night long his fever-ridden body had sprawled helplessly in the bottom of the drifting lifeboat. By morning his nine companions knew he would be dead.

After eighteen days adrift since their freighter, the Saint Anselm, was torpedoed in July 1941, the ten men were without food or water. All they had was a half tube of toothpaste.

"I think I'll mix a little toothpaste with some seawater," the first engineer said. "It might make Tony's end a little easier."

In a little tin he scooped up some seawater and squeezed toothpaste into it, stirring it with his finger. Then he held it to the dying man's lips. Mendoza gulped the mixture down eagerly.

Within an hour Mendoza's breathing eased. His body broke out in a sweat; by dawn he was sleeping peacefully, the fever broken. When he regained consciousness two hours later, he was again given a half pint of seawater mixed with toothpaste. Some of the other men, who had been without water for two days, tried it.

The same afternoon, a Spanish freighter appeared on the horizon and picked up the drifting seamen. Later, in London, they told officials about the toothpaste. The manufacturers were asked whether it contained any ingredient which would account for the dying seaman's remarkable recovery. The reply was that it did not.

The war at sea has produced many remarkable rescue stories. When Henry Heinson's ship was torpedoed in the spring of 1943, he was flung into the sea on an inky dark night. He bumped into something and found it was a piece of the wrecked ship still afloat.

Heinson climbed on to it and discovered that it was part of the pantry with one small compartment still intact. In is was a cabbage! Behind it he found a small jar of distilled water.

Heinson, bearly able to keep the piece of wreckage afloat, lived on the cabbage for seventeen days. His small supply of distilled water he eked out with snow and rain collected by means of a piece of canvas. In his pocket he had a photograph of his wife which he used to prop up and talk to for hours.

Both his body and spirit survived and after he was picked up and landed in London, Heinson was awarded the British Empire Medal for his remarkable endurance.

Captain Donald Blyth a one-legged ship's captain, found himself in a shark-infested sea with eight of his crew after their ship was torpedoed.

"Come on, boys, let's swim around," Captain Blyth shouted, and he set the example when a hopelessness gripped the freezingly cold men.

For eleven hours he swam around with his men keeping up their spirits by singing war-time songs. He was still singing hoarsely, hardly able to keep his head above the water, when an R.A.F. seaplane came overhead and dropped two rubber dinghies to them. For his bravery Captain Blyth received the Order of the British Empire.

When his ship was torpedoed in 1940, Ira Starling, a young seaman serving in a British tanker, found himself the only survivor in the sea. Near-by he saw a holed lifeboat still afloat. He had just clambered in when the U-boat opened fire on him with machine-guns.

Starling jumped overboard and hid under the water. The U-boat circled the lifeboat. Ira Starling promptly dived and came up on the other side of the lifeboat! Soon the U-boat went on its way and he climbed into the lifeboat where he found a tin of ship's biscuits and a gallon of slightly tainted water.

On these biscuits and water, Starling lived for twenty-two days. On the twenty-third day, he saw a small shark nosing around the lifeboat. The young seaman leaned over and waited. Just as the shark passed under the stern, he shot out his hand, gripped the great fish by the tail and flipped it into the boat.

He battered it to death and, with his pocket knife, sliced off shark steaks which helped him survive until he was picked up by a Portuguese ship six days later.

Perhaps the strangest rescue story of the war concerns the San Florentino. She was struck by four torpedoes and broke in two. The forepart up-ended until it floated vertically, with the stem protruding 100 feet in the air. Two men clung to it and, as it slowly sank, they climbed up the fore topmast until they were high above the sea, clinging precariously to stays.

Twenty hours later a British freighter came on the scene and the men were saved

For Hikers

When the youngster at your house announces that he's starting at once on a big expedition, a beeline hike through the woods to the pond, you can be sure a hearty sandwich of two is expected from you pronto. That tenacious favorite, peanut butter, can be modified a bit and still please him.

Fry 4 strips of bacon, crumble them into ½ cup peanut butter, and add a teaspoon of minced onion if he likes it. When this is spread on the bread, place on top bite-size pieces of tomato. Tomato provides welcome moisture, and with bite-size pieces, there are no unwieldy, large slices to cope with.

This sandwich travels well to work, too, and won't get soggy if you use the firm part of the tomato. Another good peanut butter combination adds chopped cooked prunes or apricots — ½ cup fruit and 2 teaspoons lemon juice or fruit juice to ½ cup peanut butter.

Next thing, we suppose, fishermen will be asking the government for a guaranteed annual catch.

THE FARM FRONT

by John Russell

THE ARMY WORM

Courtesy London Free Press

This is the time when farmers should be on the lookout for armyworms in their spring grain. fall wheat (if still green), corn, and pasture and hay fields, advises Dr. W. E. Heming, Head, Department of Entomology and Zoology, Ontario Agricultural College.

Reports of damaging infestations have been received from Welland, Lincoln, Wentworth, and Brant counties to date. Three of these infestations were in fall wheat and the other was in pasture. Since fall wheat is beginning to turn colour and the leaves to toughen, the worms are moving out of that crop into adjacent, more succulent crops.

This year outbreaks have not been general except in one or two areas of the southern United States. Elsewhere damage has been relatively slight and more or less local in nature. However, it may be different in Ontario, and farmers are urged to inspect susceptible crops as soon as this warning is received.

The worms, or larvae, are known by sight to most farmers. Spraying or dusting by air, the use of equipment, or baiting by hand (if labour is available) will provide control. Additional information, and the necessary control recommendations, can be obtained at the office of the agricultural representative.

The striking effectiveness of serum, together with vaccine, in preventing rabies in a group of people severely bitten by a rabid wolf in Iran, and in similar experiences of a less extensive nature, were accepted as clear demonstrations of the usefulness of this method by the Third WHO Expert Committee on Rabies meeting in the Pasteur Institute in Paris.

Until recently victims of the severe head and face bites from rabid animals often succumbed, despite prompt inoculation of rabies vaccine, probably because the infection had become established before vaccine could take effect. The combined treatment with serum and vaccine now gives assurance of success even in the most serious cases, as the serum appears to check the disease until the vaccine can begin to work.

During the past 15 years, among victims of rabid wolves treated at the Institute Pasteur in Teheran about 40% of these bitten in the head died despite vaccine treatment. A trial was therefore organized there by WHO to represent the severest proof to which the serum could be submitted, and to attempt to remedy the situation created by the failure of classical methods of treatment in severe exposure to rabies. From 1950 to 1954 only isolated cases were successfully treated by the new method, and their number was not sufficient to reach a definite conclusion.

However in August 1954, a rabid wolf attacked 29 people in an Iranian village in the space of a few hours. This provided the opportunity for a decisive test. The victims were taken at once to Teheran and treated on arrival, with conclusive results even among the 18 patients who suffered severe head wounds.

The most striking case was that of a six-year-old boy whose skull had been crushed by the wolf's bite and who survived, despite the fact that rabies virus had been, so to speak, directly injected into his brain. He was given six injections of serum and a course of vaccine.

A new Technique for protecting persons whose occupations expose them to the possibility of bites of rabid animals was outlined at the Paris meeting. Veterinarians, laboratory workers, postmen, workers in gas and electrical industries and delivery services, must often undergo repeated treatments with rabies vaccine and this carries a danger of post-vaccination complications.

The new approach involves providing basic protection by giving very small doses of chicken embryo vaccine, or a few doses of ordinary nervous tissue vaccine, followed by a single booster dose after they are bitten, instead of the long (14-21 day) schedule of inoculations now performed.

Rabies in wild animals, particularly in foxes, jackals and wolves, is a problem in many countries. It also exists in insectivorous bats in areas of North America and it has long been established that rabies is transmitted to men and animals in Latin America by blood-sucking bats.

The finding of rabies in insectivorous bats in Yugoslavia indicates that this problem is not confined to the Western Hemisphere. Wild animal reservoirs present special difficulties and it was agreed that extraordinary measures must be evolved to combat them.

The serum-vaccine treatment, an important advance in the fight against rabies, is the result of international collaboration, co-ordinated by WHO.

The Expert Committee members, whose laboratories are situated in India, Iran, Israel, Spain, France and the United States, have been working together on problems of rabies control since 1950.

In A Dither

Anxiety and tensions are a natural — and protectively useful — part of modern living, Dr. George S. Stevenson points out in his new booklet, "How to Deal With Your Tensions," released by the National Association for Mental Health. The time to watch out for them is "when emotional upsets come frequently, shake us severely, and fail to wear off after a while." Some of the danger signals:

- Do minor problems and disappointments throw you into a dither?
- Do the small pleasures of life fail to satisfy you?
- Do you find it difficult to get along with people?
- Do you fear people or situations that never used to trouble you?
- Do you feel trapped?
- Do you feel inadequate, suffer the tortures of self-doubt?

If the answers to most of these qestions is "yes," Dr. Stevenson suggests these ways of making life more bearable:

- When something worries you, don't bottle it up. Talk it over with some level-headed person you can trust.
- When things go wrong, don't make yourself "just stand there and suffer." Escape for a while (not permanently) in a brief trip, a movie, a book, or a game.
- If you get into frequent quarrels with people, stand your ground when you are right, but do it calmly, and remember that you could be wrong.
- If your workload seems unbearable, remember to take one thing at a time. Shun that "Superman" urge that makes you expect too much from yourself.
- Don't feel that you must "get there first," no matter how trivial the goal.
- If you feel "left out," neglected, and rejected socially, try "making yourself available" instead of waiting for others to make overtures. — From "Newsweek."

Gideon, Foe of Paganism. Judges 6: 25-32.

Memory Selection: Thou shalt have no other gods before me. Exodus 20: 3.

The Israelites were greatly poverished because of t peated attacks of the M over a period of se They began to call prophet reminded th had delivered thei from the Egyptians. He rebuked them for their disobedience and bade them have no fear of the gods of the Amorites.

Then the angel of the LORD appeared to Gideon commissioning him to deliver his people. He hesitated, saying, "My people is poor in Manasseh, and I am the least in my father's house." But the LORD said, "Surely I will be with thee." That night under cover of darkness Gideon and his men destroyed the altar of Baal which his father had built, cut down the sacred grove and used its wood to offer sacrifice on an altar to the LORD. His father, whose conscience had probably been pricking him stood in defence of Gideon before the men of the city, saying, "Will ye plead for Baal?—If he be a god, let him plead for himself."

About 724, the English monk, Boniface, apostle to the Germans, similarly defied Thor, the god of thunder. In Upper Hesse in the presence of thousands of enraged heathen and trembling half-Christians he cut down a sacred oak consecrated to Thor. When he was not stricken by a bolt from heaven the people were utterly amazed. Thor-worship received a body blow.

Gideon prepared an army of 30,000 men. God said they were too many. "Lest Israel vaunt themselves against me saying, 'Mine own hand hath saved me'." When the fearful were asked to leave 22,000 went. Another 7,700 failed on the next test. They were not sufficiently alert and keen for the battle. The remaining 300 "stood every man in his place round about the camp." It was a great day of victory.

Gideon asked for and received signs from the Lord to encourage him in his work. In this day of fuller revelation we should not be so insistent on signs but should obey God in the simplicity of faith. Sensuality, wealth and fame are some of the gods worshipped today. Let us point the way to the true God as revealed in Jesus Christ.
