Village of Crysler Mourns Drowning of Two Girls

St. John's Anglican Church, Crysler, was crowded to the doors this afternoon by mourning relatives and friends attending the double funeral of two young girls of the village who lost their lives in the Nation River Tuesday evening.

The victims are:
Nora Marcellus, 16, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clifton Marcellus, and Marjory Armstrong, 17, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Armstrong.

Tuesday evening about 7.30 Nora Marcellus went to the rescue of Marjory Armstrong who got into difficulties while swimming near the railway bridge at the west end of the town. Both girls disappeared beneath the surface and their bodies were not recovered until one hour later.

Rev. Mr. Weegar, rector of St. John's, conducted the funeral service at 2.30 this afternoon and was assisted by Rev. G. O. Davies, rector of Holy Trinity, Chesterville, a former pastor of the Crysler church.

An eye-witness of the accident, Joseph Lafrance, was on the far shore of the river, about 500 yards downstream, when he heard Miss Armstrong, who had been swimming some distance from shore, scream for help. Her chum, Miss Marcellus, was on the river bank but at once plunged to the rescue. Through the gathering early evening dusk, Mr. Lafrance had a confused glimpse of the girls struggling side by side in the water. Then they disappeared.

Mr. Lafranc called Dan McDonald, N.Y.C. agent, who at once spread the alarm in the village. A large crowd gathered at the river shore and two boys, Alan Gormley, 19, and William Brydges, 18, began diving in an effort to recover the bodies. They were unsuccessful.

However, two local men, Clayton Fawcett and Roy Ouderkirk ,secured a boat upstream, and armed with pike poles, began a search at the scene. About 8.30 o'clock, Miss Armstrong's body was recovered, and half an hour later, with her father in the boat assisting Mr. Fawcett and Mr. Ouderkirk, Miss Marcellus' body was brought ashore.

Worked For More Than Hour.

Dr. J. C. Gormley, Crysler, was called, and worked on the bodies for more than an hour before abandoning hope of restoring breathing. The bodies were taken to Jerry Page and Son's funeral parlours, Crysler. Dr. J. Pollock, Avonmore, coroner for the district, was notified of the tragedy.

Miss Armstrong and Miss Marcellus were loved by all in Crysler where both were born. They had attended a picnic of St. John' Presbyterian Sunday School in the afternoon, and had gone swimming together about seven o'clock in the evening.

They were alone, and were seen going toward the popular swimming place near the village, whistling and singing as they went.

The spot at which the accident occurred, about half an hour after the girls arrived at the river, is only ten feet deep, but varies in depth from the shore to the middle of the stream. Both girls were stated to be good swimmers.

Miss Armstrong was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Armstrong and had spent the last three years at the Finch High School, and was loved by all who knew her. She attended St. John's Anglican Church, Crysler. In addition to her parents, a brother, Jack, survives.

Miss Marcellus is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clifton Marcellus, and was attending Russell High School during the past few years. She was a member of Crysler Presbyterian Church, and is mourned by her parents and several small brothers and sisters.

Bicycle-ized Pair of Hoboes Burglarize Morewood Store

Bicycle thieves are the latest word in the breaking and entering epidemic which seems to have struck this district. A. B. Allison's store at Morewood was entered early Monday morning by thieves who are supposed to have used this handy and cheap method of travelling. When Mr. Allison opened his general store Monday morning he found it in a state of confusion. Thieves had entered by breaking in a cellar window and had helped themselves to clothing, one of the burglars changing his clothes on the premises and leaving some of his old clothes in exchange.

A grey cap and a pair of worn-out boots left behind were identified by John Smith of the Morewood district as those worn by one of two men he saw hanging about in the swamp at the fur farm south of Morewood on Sunday afternoon. They were said to be in possession of bicycles and were also noticed by others.

Provincial police from Cornwall and Constable Garnet McLean of town are in charge of the investigation and are quite certain their men are bicycle pushers. The loss is said to be in the neighbourhood of $100.

Mr. Allison is said to have stated he thought he heard the marauders break the cellar window about 2.30 o'clock Monday morning through which they gained entrance to the store. At the time, however, he did not think it anything more than the slamming of a car door.

TRANSFORMERS ARE INSTALLED

Members of a Hydro construction gang have been at work installing two transformers and replacing two Hydro poles on King street near the Post Office square. The transformers are needed to take care of an increasing demand for electrical power in the business setion of the town.

Hydro Users Will Benefit By Considerable Refund

When a list of those places entitled to refunds on their Hydro accounts was published a short time ago by the Hydro Commission, the villages of Finch and Williamsburg were the only two on the St. Lawrence System shown to benefit by the rebate. With characteristic care for the welfare of the ratepayers of this place, Reeve Casselman brought to the attention of the Commission the splendid position of the financial standing of the local Hydro system and suggested that Chesterville should reap some benefit from it. This was promptly agreed to and as a result all users will next month receive a refund equal to one-sixth of their Hydro payments during the year 1932, which means that they will have had twelve months service for the cost of ten months. The larger users will probably be paid directly by cheque while the smaller amounts will be allowed on the regular bills.

Funeral This Afternoon Winchester Township Pioneer

Born in the Annable Settlement in Winchester Township almost 90 years ago and spending his whole life in that vicinity, Mr. Ira Annable passed away in the early hours of Tuesday morning, within a mile of the farm where he was born.

The funeral is being held this afternoon in the Winchester United Church of which Mr. Annable was a member. Owing to the convalesence of his pastor, Rev. J. McKay, from his recent attack of typhoid fever, it is expected that a former pastor, Rev. J. H. Miller, of Huntingdon, Que., will have charge.

He had not been in good health for ten years, part of this time being spent in bed. His devoted wife, who survives him, was his constant attendant.

Mr. Annable was quiet and unassuming, and always strictly honest in all his dealings with his fellowmen.

Besides his widow there are left one son, Lawrence, of Winchester; four daughters: Mrs. John Moffat and Mrs. Ernest Steele of Winchester; Mrs. McInnes of Iroquois, and Mrs. Simons of Spencerville.

May Mean More Work For Local Unemployed

The situation is being thoroughly looked over in an endeavour to provide an increased supply of water to be held back by the recently constructed dam across the Nation at this place. At present we seem to have the dam but very little water to be dammed. The idea now is that the flow can be considerably increased by the draining of several depressions in the river bed which now are holding quite large bodies of water which are fed by springs along the banks. If the plan is feasible the work can be undertaken as a relief measure in lessening unemployment.

Dangerous Grass Fire

A fire which caused some alarm and might have reached serious proportions was extinguished near the plant of the Nestlé's Milk Products Co., on Tuesday afternoon. A fire had been set to burn weeds which spread to dry sawdust in an ice house nearby. Fear was felt the flames might spread and reach the residence of Mrs. Angus Price nearby, and for two hours the blaze was carefully watched.

CARD OF THANKS

Mr. and Mrs. Allan Moran wish to thank their friends and neighbours for many acts of kindness during their recent bereavement in the loss of their son, Jackie.

Sight Regained By Miner After 16-Foot Tumble

Sudbury.—Blind for the past 18 months, Thomas Kupina, a mine worker, had his eyesight instantaneously restored here when the balcony on which he was sitting collapsed and he fell 16 feet to the ground.

Kupina lost his eyesight last year when he was in an accident in the Frood mines. Since then he has been unable to see, and has had to be led about by friends. Late on Friday he had been led to a house to visit. He went with them to the balcony where he sat talking. Suddenly the balcony gave way and they crashed to the ground. The others with Kupina were injured.

"I sat up, sneezed two times, and then, come easy, easy, I could see," Kupina said in relating the story of the fortunate accident. "I felt the back of my head and I had no feel like an ant-hill in my head like I used to have. My head felt good, oh, so good."

One of the men with him, Tony Saroski, suffered serious injuries to his kidneys from the crash, while the other, John Vinter, suffered a three-inch cut above the eyes.

Kupina walked home unaided for the first time since becoming blind.

Walking along the street after leaving a doctor's office, he seemed like a man in a new world. He waved at people in automobiles and peered in shop windows.

"I'm sorry my friends are hurt but I'm glad for the accident just the same, for now I can see," he exclaimed. "If I had money I'd pay for fixing that old verandah, pay doctor bills for my friends and everybody. But I have no money."

NEWS AND INFORMATION FOR THE BUSY FARMER

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture

Poultry Demand Fair.

The consumptive demand for poultry has been fairly good. Receipts are being well cleaned up from day to day. Stocks of storage poultry are very light. The holiday season is of course, a handicap to sales of both eggs and poultry in the larger centres.

Weekly Crop Report.

Peel County reports alsike yields from 3 to 6 bushels per acre. Dealers are offering $6 to $7 a bushel at present. The late blossoms on alfalfa set seed but the yield per acre will be low, owing to the failure of the first blossoms to properly pollinate and fertilize. Fall wheat has turned out in bushels per acre and quality much better than anticipated a month ago, according to a report from Lambton County. Northumberland has a wheat crop with a 25 and 30 bushel average on the better land. Crops in Carleton are up to or above the average. The oat crop in Essex will average about 20 bushels to the acre.

Honey Prospects Good.

In a survey just completed by the Department of Apiculture, O.A.C., reports were received from most of the larger beekeepers in Ontario, operating in all (more than 27,500 colonies.

Ontario's light honey crop is estimated at about thirty pounds per colony below average but of unusually fine quality and obtained mostly from the clovers.

In general, the counties lying north of a line drawn from Toronto to Sarnia have from slightly below to an average crop, while the counties south of this line have between 30 and 35 pounds per colony below average. Most of the counties east of Durham and Victoria report a crop below average.

Reports from other Provinces of the Dominion also indicate a low yield and reports from other countries give every appearance of a shortage of honey in the main producing centres in the world.

Prices Should Be Good.

With practically every pound of last year's honey sold—

With a yield of thirty pounds per colony below average—

With a crop of unusually light, high quality honey—

With increased prices of all sugars in Canada—

With a general shortage of light honey, not only in Canada but in the United States and New Zealand—

With an export preference of seven shillings per 112 pounds on the British market—

And with the exchange on the British Pound practically $1.00 higher than last year—

A considerable advance in prices is certainly indicated.

Will Be Asked For Permits After Fifteenth of August

Fruit dealers must take out permits and complete arrangements as to their bonds by the fifteenth day of the present month. Although a great many applications have been received for permits, a large number of truck dealers and commission houses have yet to make application, and present bonds as security for their responsibility, as required under the new Fruit Act.

The new act has been in force since the first week of July. Until now, however, no definite date has been set when the Fruit Branch would take action to restrain fruit dealers who have not complied with the act, and its regulations. The date has now been set for August 15th, after which no trucker, dealer, or commission house may continue in business without taking out a license. On this date a check will be commenced, covering all commission houses and dealers. Truckers, on the highways, will be asked to show their permits.

Applications should be made to P. W. Hodgetts, director, Ontario Fruit Branch, Parliament Buildings, Toronto.

Package Weight Variation Disadvantage To Producer

"Lately, while visiting the Toronto wholesale markets,' 'said C. W. Bauer, Secretary, Ontario Growers' Markets Council. "I have received numerous indications that buyers, espelially those from the chain store organizations, are becoming dissatisfied with the great variation in weight of similar products in similar packages."

"Tomatoes," he continued, "constitute an example of this condition. Personally, I have examined the contents of several baskets of tomatoes, ostensibly the same weight, only to find weight variations as great as three and four pounds in many cases.

"This situation is acting to the disadvantage of producers, since naturally, buyers are concentrating their attention on the well-filled baskets, leaving the lighter weight baskets in the hands of the whole-saler. As the growing season advances, and prices drop, returns from these slow moving packages will decrease, the resultant loss being sustained for the most part by the producer.

"So until such time as regulations call for specifc weights which, in my opinion, is the only practical solution to this question, producers will protect their own interests only by sending well-filled baskets to these distributing points."

Apple Export Outlook.

Writing prior to departure for his fifth year of work in the British market on behalf of the fruit growers of Ontario, Mr. Andrew Fulton pays tribute to the loyal support he received from the growers, thus enabling him to greatly intensify the demand for Ontario apples and building up a fine reputation for Ontario-grown brands in that market.

Commenting on prospects for the coming season, Mr. Fulton states that there is every indication of liberal supplies of apples in North America. Nova Scotia promises to have a heavy crop of apples while Virginia, Ontario's principal competitor in the United Kingdom, will likely export fair quantities during the coming season, even though there is not a heavy crop there. In British Columbia the crop is stated to be about 20 per cent lighter, which should help the barrel situation considerably. In England there is a heavy crop of early cooking apples, which is bound to affect the price of Canadian cookers until Christmas. Mr. Fulton concludes that good quality Ontario apples will be wanted and that this coming season will be a year when "quality" will count.

Following an inspection tour of Ontario, he declares that the outlook is for a slightly larger crop of apples than last year. Eastern Ontario will be about 10 per cent lighter and Western Ontario approximately 25 per cent heavier than last year. He adds: "The quality is exceptionally good, and so far, well-sprayed orchards are clean. I have never known more spraying to be done in Ontario than this year, and there is every indication that the bulk of the crop will be eligible for certification for the export market.

One morning a boy approached his schoolmaster's desk and asked for a new pen-nib. Given it, he threw the old nib on the floor. With weary sarcasm the master inquired: "Is it instinct, Jones, that makes you throw your nutshells on the bottom of your cage?"

The next day the schoolroom blind became wedged, and after one of the boys had failed to ease it the master climbed on to the radiator and, gripping the water-pipe, settled the blind easily. As he dusted his hands his eye met that of Jones, who remarked brightly: "I see you can still climb all right, sir!"

Frost on the 20th of July damaged garden crops in some places of British Columbia.

The horse in his attitude to man differs from all other classes of stock in that he produces energy not food.

Apples are sizing well in Nova Scotia, and a considerably larger crop than last year is indicated.

Michael Bradley Confesses Shooting Five Of Family

Campbell's Bay, Que., August 15th. —Michael Bradley, 42-year-old farmer, has confessed to killing five members of his family here July 21st, provincial police said to-day. Bradley has been held here on a murder charge since a week after the wholesale killings. According to police, Bradley in the confession said the wholesale killings started when his father threatened him with a pitchfork. Bradley said he left his own farm early in the morning of July 21, taking his rifle in the hope of shooting deer. When he reached his father's farm, about a mile and a half from his own, he met his father, Joseph Bradley, and his uncle John Bradley.

Bradley said he asked his father about a mortgage and the father motioned to strike him with a pitchfork. It was then, according to the confession, that Bradley fired at his father and then turned on his uncle, killing him.

The sound of the shots attracted Bradley's sister, Johanna, the confession continued. She shouted, "I'll get Tom," referring to her brother who was asleep in the house. Bradley fired at her when she turned toward the house, according to the police version, and then continued into the house.

Bradley's mother, the confession read, was cleaning her teeth in the kitchen when her son entered the door. He fired pointblank at her, the confession said, and she fell to the floor at his feet. The brother, Tom, was awakened by the shot in the kitchen and was on his way downstairs when Bradley met him, firing two shots at him, according to his statement to the police.

When pressed for a reason for the family massacre, Bradley was supposed to have said his family was having "fun" with the money he had invested in the homestead.

Although Bradley's statement failed to explain how the bodies of his father and uncle came to be found in a barn at the rear of the homestead, it was believed the men crawled there after being shot.

Bradley was arrested a week after the quintette-slaying on a warrant signed by Dr. Leopold Renaud, local coroner. He will face preliminary hearing September 7th, when it is expected his statement to the police will be produced against him. The hearing was scheduled for next Friday but will be delayed with the consent of defence and Crown counsel.

Three Prizes Are Awarded Morewood Wo's. Inst. Meeting

The August meeting of the Women's Institute of Morewood was held at the home of the secretary, Mrs. Vernon Fetterly. A large number of members and four visitors were present, and one new member. The roll call was nicely arranged, giving Do's and Don't's for an institute. "Always response to the roll call, do not say present." Mrs. Walter Coulthart read a paper, entitled "Have a Hobby."

An interesting contest was held, guessing the names of the streets in Ottawa. Three prizes were awarded, also a booby prize.

The president, Mrs. Shaver, and Mrs. J. Bogart were appointed to look after the exhibit of the Institute at the Ottawa Exhibition.

Lunch was served, Mrs. A. Swerdfeger pouring the tea.

The singing of the National Anthem closed the meeting.

The July meeting of the Morewood branch took the form of a basket picnic at Mr. Thomas' grove. A good time was enjoyed by all, including visitors and children. Mrs. W. Campbell and Mrs. A. Swerdfeger were in charge of the programme which consisted of races, games and contests. Miss Helen Shaver and Mrs. Craik won prizes in the contests. Lunch was served under the trees, all agreeing a cool shady spot should be found for the July meeting for a good time and a change.

A number of eligible young men had been invited to the party.

Jim and Jack found themselves next to each other at supper.

"Are you a suitor for Miss Molly's hand?" asked the former.

"Yes——but I didn't," returned Jack.

"Didn't what?" asked Jim turning a puzzled face.

"Didn't suit her!" shot back his neighbour.

"Do you know that I have taken up short-story writing as a career?"

"Sold anything?"

"Yes. My watch, my saxophone and my overcoat."

Gleanings From The Greens

Culled by Arthur Ogilvie.

Well, neighbour, a lot of water has gone over the dam since our last write-up, many events are now history and the season three parts over. This club did very well to go into the semi-finals in the Governor-General's Cup games. When they defeated Brockville by two shots in Prescott on July 29th but were put out by Vittorias by four shots on the Kemptville greens last Monday.

* * *

The local entry in the Eastern got in on the consolation, bringing home over-night bags which is very good going as there were 25 entries in this event from all over Eastern Ontario and from Montreal. Robertson, Hamlen, Dixon and Hutt, skip, are quite proud of themselves. The boys should have done better at that but we have a suspicion that Doc, Ham and Art were having visions of the big ones in the Madawaska as they left for there after the final game Tuesday evening. Ham and Art returned last Thursday, and Doc got in Tuesday of this week.

* * *

Jim Hanna is back from his vacation, returning in time to accompany the boys to Kemptville on Monday.

On Friday, August 4th, three teams brought home the short end of the score in the St. Lawrence game in Kemptville.

Tues, August 8th, was prize night and Frank Hess skipped Merkley, King and Wood to the tea sets. On the 9th, Flynn, Senn, Gilroy and Cass, skip, took home the salt and pepper shakers.

* * *

Last Friday, August 11th, Iroquois visited the club for the regular St. Lawrence schedule game and although they were defeated a very enjoyable evening was spent. The Iroquois boys are good sports and quite popular with the locals. Ken put on the eats which everyone voted tip-top. The games were as follows:

Chesterville		Iroquois
Olsen		F. Vitorva
King		C. D. Carr
Gilroy		R. J. Davidson
Clayton, skip	30	J. C. Gilder, skip	12
Brownlee		H. Younge
Slosser		C. Fisher
Hess		C. Hess
Hamlen, skip	19	A. Keeler, skip	17
Merkley		H. Fawcett
Lloyd		L. Davis
Robertson		J. Anderson
Casselman, skip	18	C. E. Mills	13
Total	69	Total	42

This Tuesday was regular prize night and four rinks of triples took part. Senn, Hess and Hamlin as skip took home the spoons, being five shots up on the total with a score of 24. Flynn, Robertson and Casselman were runners up with 19 points. Lloyd, Wood and Clayton as skip played Olsen, Wales and Dixon, skip, in the consolation, the scores being 10 and 7.

Doc Hutt was around to see the game. Eric went into the final game one point up on the total but Art and Tom fell down on him so Ham found some easy picking. Gord Senn played some nice bowls for Ham. Wales is back in the game after his vacation. Clayton fell all over himself making some of his shots. But that is all right, he has been batching it and Mrs. Doc is home. Doc was not with his rink at Kemptvile the other night as he made the week-end trip after his wife.

Last night three rinks went to Iroquois for the regular game at that place and came home six up on the round.

Flynn, Senn, Gilroy and Hutt were five down; Hess, Lloyd, Doering and Casselman, skip, were 11 up, and Peake, King, Wood and Cass, skip, were tied. The boys were given a hearty welcome by the Iroquois club who expected four rinks, but we were unable to get the fourth together. All were home early considering the size of the lunch prepared for them.

* * *

O. L. King's smiling countenance is seen on the greens again after his 1600 mile trip through the New England states. He was back in time to go to Iroquois and help "Dubbie" hold the tie.

* * *

Prize night to-night, so come early and avoid the rush.

"Almost everybody has something to sell and in order to make a sale there must first be a contact of some kind.

"Newspaper advertising is for the purpose of helping to sell either merchandise or ideas or both. The appeal of the local newspaper is universal; its news is eagerly sought and it offers an excellent opportunity for the local merchant to bring his merchandise to the attention of the local constituency.

"In the newspaper the merchant has localized and concentrated circulation, permitting a hold upon public attention within a confined trading area. The newspaper invites immediate attention and permits flexibility in planning and carrying out advertising schedules.

"The newspaper, with proper management, should have a real place of influence in a community and as such make it perhaps the most effective advertising medium.

Prize Lists Are Issued By Agricultural Society

The prize lists for the Second Annual Exhibition of The Chesterville and District Agricultural Society are being issued this week. A number of classes in both the horse and cattle divisions have been added. In the section devoted to horses, four new classes have been added and prize money in several instances increased over last year. A class is now provided for the showing of Guernsey cattle and several new sections have been added to each of the four classes.

The directors are working for a bigger and better show than ever this year. They expect a larger crowd than last year to be on hand to boost this young society which is rapidly growing in a mature standing.

Another class has been added to the racing programme for the second day. A race for the 2.26 horses has been provided with a purse of $125 00, a 2.17 class, purse of $150, and a 2.14 with a stake of $150.00, making a total of $425.00 for the afternoon's sport. The first day's programme will include baseball and field and track sports and a Green Horse Race for a purse of $25.00, raised from $10.00 of last year. On this day all Public, Separate and High School pupils will be admitted free of charge.

Melvins Girl Is Married On Saturday Afternoon

A quiet but interesting wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Pruner of the Melvin Settlement, on Saturday, at 3.30 p.m., when Miss Sadie M., their second eldest daughter, was united in marriage to Mr. William C. Brown, youngest son of Mrs. James R., and the late Mr. Brown, of Mountain.

Rev. D. W. Summers, of the Wesleyan church, Winchester, officiated. The wedding music was played by Mr. R. Brocklehurst of Montreal.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a becoming gown of royal blue rough crepe, and carried a bouquet of sweet peas and maiden hair fern.

She was attended by her sister, Miss Laura Pruner, as bridesmaid, who wore a dress of Alice blue silk crepe. She carried a bouquet of pink rosebuds.

Mr. George Barkley of Mountain acted as groomsman.

Following the ceremony, a buffet luncheon was served to 45 guests.

Many beautiful gifts were received by the bride.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown left on a short trip through New York State and upon their return will reside in the vicinity of Winchester.

Liars In Court.

Twice, during the past week, Magistrate Glenn E. Strike has been hard upon liars in the Ottawa Police Court. On the first occasion he told a defence lawyer that his client, quite a young fellow, had "lied" his case away on the witness stand. In the second instance it was an elderly man of whom the magistrate told his defending counsel who had pleaded for leniency for him and did not get it "He lied to the police officer. And I don't like a liar."

Most responsible citizens will join the magistrate in his aversion to those whose light regard for truth jeopardizes justice in the courts.

Falsehood under oath is subject to heavy punishment under the Criminal Code, on conviction. But not all such lying is brought to that extreme of justice ,otherwise the courts would be considerably cluttered with such cases, judging by observations made by Maistrate Strike.

Perhaps it is just as well, therefore, that the magistrate should make it clear that those who persist in taking chances by not telling the truth in the courts are likely to be summarily dealt with in ways that may be highly inconvenient to them, even though they may escape trial on the serious charge of perjury.

Ontario Apple Shipment Must Bear Gov't Certificate

During the last session of the Federal Parliament the Dominion and Provincial Departments of Agriculture were referred to as the cogs of one huge machine, the smooth, systematic interlocking of its mechanism being held up as an example to be followed in official co-operation and co-ordination. If further evidence were needed of the harmonious working between the various departments of agriculture, that proof will be submitted on the 23rd of this month.

On that date, the Provincial Fruit Branch of Ontario and the Dominion Fruit Branch will join forces in the inspection of the apple crops of Ontario in connection with regulation No. 1 (export) of the Destructive Insect and Pest Act, under the supervision of the Foreign Pests Suppression Division of the Entomological Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa. This regulation states: "The export of apples comprising all varieties of fresh fruit, to any country other than the United States of America, is prohibited, unless the shipment is accompanied by a certificate of inspection issued and signed by an inspector duly appointed under the Destructive Insect and Pest Act. It shall be illegal for any common carrier, steamship company, or other person to accept for export any shipment unless the required certificate accompanies the shipping papers.'

On the one hand, while the inspectors do not wish to overlook any grower who may be interested in this inspection for export; on the other hand, in order to have time and expense, it is intended to inspect only those orchards from which apples are liable to be exported. Thus to facilitate organization for inspection, any grower who proposes to export apples is required to submit an application for inspection, with the exception of growers who have been carrying out control operations this season under the Ontario Fruit Branch under the "Orchard Certification Plan." These growers have already been listed.

It is intended to inspect orchards before harvest, commencing on the 23rd of this month, and any varieties of apples found free from infestation may be exported, subject, or course, to further examination by the Dominion Fruit Inspectors at the time of packing when certificates will be issued.

Already a large number rof applications have been received. Applications from those growers who are not under the "Orchard Certification Plan" should be forwarded to the Secretary, Destructive Insect and Pest Advisory Board, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa. No stamp is required on the envelope. The application should give the name and postal address of the owner, the location of his orchard by county, township, and lot number, and should state the varieties and number of trees in his orchard.

Notable Features To Be Seen At Ottawa's Exhibition

Many new and outstanding factors are contributing to the keen interest taken in the Ottawa Exhibition which will open on Monday, August 21st, and continue for an entire week, six days and six nights.

To many the important feature will be the programmes by the band of His Majesty's Scots Guards. This famed organization is now on the Atlantic by the gracious permission of His Majesty, the King, and will open its Canadian tour in Ottawa on the Monday of Exhibition week, giving two concerts each day for the first days of the week. In addition to the band proper there will be four Highland dancers and a piper, a champion of Scotland. For the last two days the band of the Black Watch, Montreal, will be heard. This is an outstanding Canadian band and it features concert programmes.

Eric The Robot.

Eric the Robot, one of the only two mechanical men in the world, also will open his Canadian tour on the Monday of the Ottawa exhibition. Standing little higher than an ordinary man, this creature of metal and electricity weighs three and a half tons. Without any human aid other than the voice, Eric stands or sits down by word of command, smokes a cigarette, fires a revolver, answers simple questions reads from a book and does other amazing things.

Grandstand Programme.

For the feature evening offering in front of the grandstand will be a Schooley production, an elaborate music dance revue, Winter Garden Revue of 1933. Schooley has been in Ottawa before and is coming back because of the wonderful outdoor presentations which he stages with gorgeous costumes and remarkable lighting and scenic effects. The production and cast will be entirely different from those of previous years. In addition to twenty-four ballerinas there will be an outstanding prima donna and special acts by artists who have made good on the theatrical stage and in night clubs of the large United States cities. This offering will be in addition to the high class vaudeville acts and the spectacular fireworks display which will conclude the programme each evening.

Centres of Interest.

For the first time, the Dominion Archives will make a display at an exhibition. This will be one of the most interesting displays ever seen in any exhibition. It is being installed now and on account of the priceless articles which are being placed they are under constant supervision of the R.C.M.P. and of a city fireman The live fish, wild animals and game birds from the Ontario Game and Fisheries Department will be another centre of interest for young and old. In addition many other departments of the Dominion and provincial governments will have educational and interesting displays. The city waterworks department also is arranging a novel exhibition.

Horse races, a really new midway with the latest in rides and shows, automobile show, pure food show, displays by merchants and manufacturers, horse shows, live stock, poultry and pets, flowers and fruit, child welfare, baby show, dog show and a long list of other attractions will contribute to the making of a great exhibition.

Coupon tickets giving six -admissions for one dollar are now on sale and are in good demand. These may be obtained from agents or from various business places and from branches of the Bank of Nova Scotia outside the city. Only a limited number of these tickets will be issued.

Big Fish—Happy Fisherman

Hook a 35 pound musky for yourself like this one and then sympathize with J. A. Gibson of Toronto who fought for four and a half hours near French River Bungalow Camp 215 miles north of Toronto, to land it. It is the seventh musky to be caught near the camp by guests this season and was caught on Friday, July 21st. so fisherman's luck seem' to be a complication of opinion. The scene took place late in the afternoon right in front of the outlying camp dock in full view of guests who lined the shore and started fires in order to see the finish, forgetting dinner and later celebrating the latest entry in the bungalow camp annual musky competition fittingly. Since every musky to date has practically been larger than the last, the winner of the challenge shield this year may become famous... if he can land it.

"The Love That Never Dies"

FLATULENCE.

UNDER normal conditions, a considerable amount of gas is present in the intestines. The gas serves a useful purpose in that it stimulates the contractions of the bowel which move the contents of the bowel along the intestinal tract.

Flatulence means an excessive production of gas in the intestines, and it is usually due to one of two causes. The first is the fermentation of food which occurs when there is an excess in the diet of sugars, starches or cellulose, the indigestible residue of coarse vegetables and whole grains.

This is most apt to occur in the person who is constipated, because in such cases the contents of the bowel are retained for a comparatively long time, and there is thus a greater opportunity for fermentation with gas production. This gas is not particularly offensive, and the condition is relieved by passing the gas as flatus or with the bowel movements.

In such cases, it is advisable to reduce the consumption of peas, beans, coarse vegetables, potatoes and whole-grain cereals. The diet with considerable roughage is not the best diet for all, even though it is the best for some people.

The other cause of gas in the intestines is putrefaction. This gas is foul and offensive as it arises from the putrefaction of proteins in the diet. The chief source of protein in our diets is meat. In such cases, too much meat may have been used or, due to lack of habit or exercise, there may not be regular bowel elimination.

The importance of diet and elimination are important in considering this condition. Another point noticed is that the same diet is not suited to all persons. This is largely the result of abnormal conditions which have been allowed to develop. If the bowel has become irritated, it is obvious that coarse foods are not suitable as their use is apt to aggravate the irritation.

Diet is not the only consideration. Exercise, rest, fresh air, cleanliness and regular elimination must also be secured if the body is to be properly nourished and kept free from the abnormal conditions which cause distress and discomfort. Health is more than freedom from disease. The healthy body runs smoothly and efficiently; the healthy individual is effective and happy.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 194 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

"Why do you talk so to yourself?"

"Well, first, I like to talk to a sensible man, and second, I like to hear a sensible man talk."

The summer fallow is by no means a modern institution but has come down through the ages. The practice apparently was not always for the purpose of conserving moisture as the ancient injunction "Break up your fallow land and sow not among thorns" suggests the use of the fallow as a means of weed eradication.

Bernard was generally in trouble. Finding that words had but little effect upon the child, the father resorted to sterner measures. A neighbour, watching him chastise the boy, noticed with admiration that Bernard gave no audible indication of the pain he was suffering. "Don't you ever cry when you're beaten, Bernard?" he asked him afterward.

"What's the use?" retorted the small boy. "The old man's deaf!"

THE MORNING AFTER

THE dining-room door opened slowly, very slowly, until one eye, the tip of a nose and a blur of curly hair were visible. The Bainbridge family were assembled around the breakfast table, and Mr. Bainbridge said with sleepy jocularity: "Good morning, Harriet. Come in, and let us see if your eyes are red and your cheeks pale and your temper uncertain, like the rest of us. I tell you, this family is soft. We can't stand late hours."

"Poor old dad," came from the crack in the door. "I just wanted to see how you were taking life, before I ventured."

The door opened wide, and a girl of about eighteen, with merry eyes and a mop of light hair, came quickly in. She made a wry face at her father in response to his teasing laugh, kissed her mother, and burst out with enthusiasm:

"Well, didn't we have a grand time? Didn't everybody look well? And nothing went wrong—nothing at all, except when the decorations and things were too heavy for the middle chandelier. That was why it came down on tope of one of the boys—Grace Dean's cousin Gloucester Ware, from Cornell. I was so frightened, but he just stood there so quietly and said, 'Will you please show me where to put this bouquet?' as if it had been a box of roses. Mother, Dewey Brandon had to leave early, and he asked me to say good-bye to you for him. Mother, I do think Jim ought to see that all the girls are having a good time, in his own house, and not devote himself entirely to Gertie Pierce."

Jim Bainbridge started.

"I never did!" he exclaimed. "Harriet may be a fine hostess at her own party, but I think she took a lot more notice of Gloss Ware than of the other boys."

"Jim!"

"Well ,you did," said her brother. "You devoted your whole evening to him—you and May Leonard."

Harriet planted her elbows on the table, oblivious to everything but the argument. "We know you have a very brilliant imagination, dear brother," she said with mock politeness, "but if you really thought I would do anything in such bad taste you wouldn't say anything about it in public."

Harriet flung out one arm, upset a dish of apples and set them rolling in all directions. Mrs. Bainbridge jumped nervously, her husband caught one of the apples and at the same time upset his coffee cup.

"Gracious, Harriet!" said Mrs. Bainbridge. "You will give me hysterics next, anl I can't stand that on top of so little sleep."

"I'm sorry," said the girl. "Isn't everyone jumpy this morning? I suppose every family feels this way after a party. Oh, I can't bear to think it's really over. Do you feel dreadfully tired, mother?"

"Out of tune with the world," answered Mrs. Bainbridge. "I'd give anything if I didn't have to go to town. It's got to be done, though, and I can rest to-morrow. Have you been in the parlour, Harriet? The floor's pretty bad. I'm sorry, but it had better be done to-day, for to-morrow the Drews are coming and we can't take them into a room like that."

"No, I haven't looked at it," said Harriet, screwing up her face. "I'll see quite enough of that charming place before night."

"Oh, yes," said Jim, returning from various parts with his hands full of apples. "There's Harriet's little stunt to be done, isn't there? How d'you feel, Harriet? Are you going back on your promise? Do you wish you hadn't had the party?"

"No, indeed!" declared Harriet. "I'll keep my promise, though my back breaks and my knees wear out. I said that if only I could have a party, I'd wax the floor myself and put things straight, and I'll do it. Provide me only with a can of wax and a woollen rag and I'll fulfil the contract!"

"I can't ask Mary to do it," said Mrs. Bainbridge; "she'd leave in a minute; so you can take your choice between cooking and washing dishes, and waxing the floor."

"Dishes! Ugh! Horrible word—no, thank you, Mary need have no qualms. Trot along to town, mother, but be sure to bring me some witch-hazel and a bottle of liniment. Jim, you made some of those scratches; you ought to help!"

"Too many rags would spoil the polish," retorted the young man. "Next year I shall have a coming-out party, and then I shan't ask for anybody's help!"

"Really, for your mature ages of eighteen and twenty, you two are more quarelsome than youngsters half your age," intersposed Mr. Bainbridge, teasingly. "Still, Harriet, I'm relieved to find that you aren't the sophisticated and finished young lady you appeared to be last night. As you swept down the room with your head up and your chin tilted, and that 'I came, saw and conquered' expression in your eye, I was quite afraid of you."

"Dad, how can you? I—"

Jim broke in mischievously: "Harriet came and saw, so did May Leonard; but which will conquer still remains to be seen. Battleground, our bedecked and dazzling parlour; ambush, a few straggling palms and a bench on the porch; artillery, all possible charms and blandishments; trophy, Gloucester Ware, a delectable young prize, whose interest may lead sundry future favours, such as an invitation to Junior Week—"

Harriet rose from the table with blazing cheeks. "Jim I know you don't mean half of all that, but still it's insulting to say such things. If you really suppose that either May or I is capable of doing anything so vulgar, so hideously apparent—"

"May is, you aren't," said Jim frankly. "I beg your pardon, Harriet. I was only teasing you, but I mean it all for May. She's ambitious and a schemer and I oughtn't to mention your name beside hers. I know you hadn't any such thought, but anybody could see she had planned a regular campaign. Well, here's bad luck to her! Mother, if you're going on that train, you'll have to hustle. I'll take your bag anl go ahead."

He snatched his cap in one hand, and bag in the other, clattered out the door and down the street. Harriet found her mother's gloves and pocketbook, helped her into her coat, and sent her after Jim.

"Well, she made it that time," said Harriet with a relieved sigh as she saw the gates go down across the street just as Mrs. Bainbridge reached the station. "I always think each time will be the last—"

She went into the house again, crossed the hall and opened the parlour door. One glance was quite enough. She sat down squarely in the middle and surveyed the wreck.

FOR several years it had been Harriet's ambition to have a party in the big parlour. Mrs. Bainbridge, finding her daughters heart set on it, had finally consented to let her have a party when she was eighteen, if she would take the responsibility of repairing all the damage. And now the great event was over, and the day of retribution was at hand. Scratches, gashes, scrapes, in all directions—the floor was one great stretch of awful white marks on the dark wood finish. "It looks as if a four-horse team with hob-nailed shoes had been skating here," remarked Harriet, despondently.

The walls were covered with masses of trailing Virginia creeper, withered and shrunken, and the hydrangeas, banked in the corners, were falling away from their supports at all sorts of crazy angles.

Harriet got up with determination, covered herself with an enormous blue apron, and set to work. As she poured small quantities of liquid wax on a woollen cloth and rubbed it vigourously, her thoughts returned to the fun of last evening.

Harriet didn't like May Leonard. There had never been any but outwardly friendly relations between them, but they had always been rivals. Harriet knew that it was not she who matched herself against May. She had never desired to "get the best" of anybody. But that was one of May's chief aims. She loved to conquer, even in the merest trifles, and for some reason she couldn't seem to let Harriet alone Throughout their high-school course—class offices, prizes, scholarships—somehow these two were always opposed. It had been a bitter disappointment to Harriet when May got the scholarship to Smith, but had she won it she would have felt none of the exultant pride which filled May's heart, and she did not begrudge it. Harriet was going to a smaller and less expensive college, and even this meant considerable economy. It would not have mattered to May, whose parents were wealthy enough to send her anywhere.

As for Gloucester Ware—he had not been in Dunford for six years, and now his visit to the Deans was a source of great pleasure to all their small clique. As Harriet had said, he was more considerate than most boys and his two years at college had not turned him into a conceited prig or a bookworm. He was fond of a good time, but he possessed also a keen sense of discrimination. He and Harriet had been very good friends six years ago, and when he returned she had hoped for a renewal of their jolly, easy friendship. But somehow, all was changed. Wherever they went,May went also—and Harriet very easily persuaded herself that he liked May better.

Last night, he paid more attention to May than to her, Harriet thought. She had been simply disgusted with May, who had made herself very ridiculous trying to be flirtatious, and to eclipse Harriet's own importance at her own party. It did seem in the nature of a campaign on May's part. Oh, well, boys were queer; you never could tell what they liked in a girl, anyway. Some girls make perfect idiots of themselves to attract attention, and were apparently doubly popular.

"I certainly won't even degrade myself to trying to rival May," declared Harriet, with a flourish of her rag, "even though that does seem to amount to a confession that I'm not her match. Well, I don't want to be—in that way."

She sat back on her heels and viewed her work with satisfaction. A large round section of the floor had regained its former colour and polish under her energetic applications, but there was still a wide expanse to cover. Harriet was crawling on hands and knees to an untouched region when a sound from the street made her pause in dismay. Yes, it was,—there could be no doubt,—it was Grace Dean speaking. She would know that quick, vivacious voice anywhere. And horrors! Gloss Ware was with her—he was laughing now. And, worst of all, she heard May's voice, shrill, but rather sweet, saying, "I think she must be home—let's go in." "All right," said Gloucester Ware, and the gate clicked.

HARRIET'S mind was working quickly. With a flash, she remembered May's pitying comment on the floor last night, and her question—"What on earth will you do?" Harriet had said, "Oh, I shall have to see about that to-morrow."

"If only I had more diplomacy," she thought, "I wouldn't have so many hard bumps in the world." It was really very poor taste and very unkind of May to bring Gloss Ware there the next morning, when she knew how unpleasant it would be. She hadn't thought it of May. And meanwhile they were on the porch ,ringing the bell. "Well, I'll disappoint her," declared Harriet, roused at last; "if she thinks I'm going to throw my apron behind the door and appear nervous and flustered and blowzy, she is mistaken. I've got some pride, and I'm not ashamed of working, even if I do look a sight."

Harriet instinctively knew that May would be in correct morning attire, not a hair out of place. She pushed back her light hair impatiently, at the thought, and called "Come in!" through the open window. "Turn the knob and lift the latch and walk into my parlour," she further directed, in a sing-song voice, for now her ready sense of humour was coming to her relief, and she imagined funnier things to follow.

She was scrubbing away with all her might when the parlour door opened to admit Grace Dean, her brother Jack, and May with Gloucester Ware. As she rose to receive them, somehow or other, she tipped over the can of liquid wax and a great stream poured out and began to solidify in the middle of the floor.

"Oh, heavens!" gasped Harriet, "I've upset the can! It'll get hard—I've got to rub it in—the floor will be ruined! Sit down, and excuse me! Oh, what shall I do?"

She seized the cloth and began to rub frantically.

"Oh, what a lark!" cried Grace Dean who was always ready for anything. "I'll help!"

"So will we," cried Gloucester Ware, and before Harriet knew what was happening the boys and Grace had divided the other half of the cloth between them and were on their hands and knees, attacking the hardening wax with determination. Gloss went at it as if it were his special forte in life, and Grace was laughing so, she could hardly work.

Meanwhile, May Leonard was left standing alone in the middle of the floor while the others crawled around like some new kind of reptile. For once things had moved a little too swiftly for her. Harriet was always doing surprising things, but this was really beyond anything. How could anyone imagine that she would receive callers on her hands and knees or that she would go on working with them to help her? Grace Dean was silly—why on earth had she started in, and the boys, too? But that was just the sort of thing Grace liked.

"Sorry there aren't any more rags, May," called Grace, emerging from under a sofa where she had pursued a small retreating stream of wax. "This is the eruption of Vesuvius—look out for the lava! There goes some under your chair!"

"Oh, do stop, people," cried Harriet sitting up with crimson cheeks and riotous hair. "You were just fine to help me; I don't know what I should have done—that wax would simply have gotten hard in a lump, and then nothing could have budged it. I can finish it to-morrow. You see, this is what you get for coming 'the morning after.' You might have known you'd have to work."

"Oh, let's go on and finish," exclaimed Grace, enthusiastically. "I never had so much fun in my life!" Grace was always outdoing herself in the matter of fun. "It's too much for you to do alone, anyway, Harriet. Can't we?"

"Everybody sit down, and Jack and I will do the deed, while you criticize," said Gloucester Ware, refusing to leave his corner.

"That's just awfully good of you, but I couldn't think of such a thing," said Harriet, resisting Jack Dean's attempt to steal her rag.

"Oh, no, we'll all help," declared Grace. "You wouldn't be doing this, tired as you must be, if it wasn't a matter of haste. And we've interrupted you. Come on, May, get a rag," she added mischievously for May was still completely taken aback at the turn affairs had taken.

GRACE and the boys set to work so delightedly that Harriet couldn't stop them. The vision of May Leonard, scrambling about on the floor, was too much for her. She choked hysterically and smothered her laughter against an upholstered chair as she heard Grace exclaim:

"Good gracious, May, get to work. Don't sit there like the image of shocked propriety. This is The Morning After, and you've got to help. You suggested coming. Come on, here's half my rag"—generously ripping—"there's a dry place over there, and here's the can in the middle. You pour out a small quantity of the liquid wax," continued Grace, holding the can and reading the directions in a pedagogical manner, "and rub vigourously into the floor with a woollen cloth. Excuse me, I said rag. That's what we've been doing—'rubbing vigourously' I should say! Right over there, May!"

May took the cloth in silence and departed. She was helpless and furious. Harriet knew now that she had caused the visit, and how she must be laughing in her sleeve! What an awkward position! May hated awkward positions—for herself.

Harriet was doubled up in one corner, waxing the floor under the piano and shaking helplessly with laughter. That the tables should be turned so neatly and so naturally—May's hair was coming down, and her patrician white hand was actually in contact with a rag of dubious cleanliness.

Gloucester Ware called to Harriet to inspect his shine ,and tell him if she didn't think he'd make a good bootblack.

"Well, you have the necessary qualities," laughed Harriet, "industry, perserverance and good-humour—only you spend too much time over one place!"

"Oh, this is my particular scratch," he told her. "I've got to make this better than before."

"Now that's all imagination."

"I know one thing that I didn't imagine—I had a glorious time last night, but I'm having a better one to-day."

"You're good to say so, anyway. It's well you like work."

"There's a great deal in working in pleasant company—"

"Also in working to advantage. You've done all this before."

"All right, let's migrate."

He helped her to her feet, and they started gingerly across the moist floor. As Harriet saw May, hot and angry, but determined not to give in, she felt that the punishment had exceeded the offense, and, going up to her she said, generously:

"Do stop, May. Don't bother about it. You're not used to doing such things. Neither is Grace. I oughtn't to have let you do it. Even if I do have to clean up when I have a party that's no reason why I should drag you people into it."

Harriet felt very keenly, just then, her relative poverty, but she spoke with a quiet pride and dignity, and in her tone was no hint of a sense of May's humiliaion.. May was so surprised that she still knelt there on the floor, wondering why Harriet was so kind, when in her place— May was shrewd enough to realize that she had deserved this turn of affairs, though that didn't make it any pleasanter. May was rather a queer compound—at that moment she rather despised Harriet for neglecting such a good opportunity further to humiliate a rival. She certainly couldn't understand Harriet. She looked at her coldly, questioningly, almost contemptuously. Harriet read her glance and flushed scarlet at the thought that May should have expected worse things of her. But she held out her hand to help May up, while Grace's merry voice broke in:

"Well, that's done! Now isn't that floor a dream? I want a chance to scratch it all over again. Now weren't we dears to help you,Harriet? Always count on us as your private auxiliaries hereafter. Come on, Jack, we've simply got to go. No, indeed Harriet, I enjoyed it. Au revoir!"

As they went down the street, Gloucester Ware thrust his hands deep into his pockets and drew a deep breath.

Harriet Bainbridge is a thoroughbred," he was saying to himself. "She treated May more decently than I ever imagined one girl could another who was downright mean to her. If she'll come up to Cornell for Junior Week, I'll feel honoured, and I'll do my best to show her I appreciate her!"

"Fresh from the Gardens"

A young man whose knowledge of cards was vague was roped in to complete a bridge four.

He committed his first mistake by throwing away a king on a trick already taken by his opponent's ace.

"Good heavens!" bellowed the young man's partner, "a king doesn't usually beat an ace."

"I know," stammered the beginner, "but I thought I'd let it have a try."

The burning of peat lands nowadays is not generally recommended, as uneven burning is likely to occur and there is grave danger of removing so much of the top soil that the infertile soil will be exposed. Burning, however may be resorted to if the peat is very deep and little decomposed, and if there is no danger of fire spreading.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

By . . . ETTA BITTA PYE.

MAKE FULL USE OF THE LUSCIOUS TOMATOES.

TOMATOES are one of the present highlights of our gardens. Perhaps you have been reading the advertisements on the subject of the tomato crop as it stands at the moment, which our Ontario Department of Agriculture has been publishing.

Most thinking women (and we are proud to feel that the vast majority of homemakers rate that description) realize that we are not only adding to the enjoyment of our tables when we serve the luscious fruits, the fresh vegetables, that are so generously ours at present, but are also adding to the store of family health and resistance to disease when we offer foods so rich in the vitamins and minerals that offer the most secure protection.

So for these reasons, let us look to our uses for the fine red tomatoes that abound now. Serve them raw—serve them cooked—can them if that is your practice. Nothing you can give your family is more healthful.

Tomato Steak.

3 tablespoons shortening
2½ pounds round steak, about 2 inches thick
1 large onion
3 carrots
2 white turnips
2 cups canned tomatoes
2 teaspoons salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper

Heat shortening in frying pan. Add meat and sear it brown on all sides. Arrange in a casserole and cover with onion, carrots, and turnips (which have been pealed and chopped very fine), tomatoes, salt and pepper. Cover tightly and bake in a slow oven of 275 degrees F. for 3 hours. Thicken gravy if desired. Servings, 6.

Devilled Tomatoes.

Slice tomatoes, roll in flour and pan fry in butter. Put on platter and cover with sauce made by cooking the following ingredients:-

4 tablespoons butter
2 teaspoons powdered sugar
1 hard-boiled egg
2 tablespoons vinegar
1 egg, slightly beaten

Cook together, butter, sugar, hard-boiled egg mashed to a paste mixed with vinegar and egg slightly beaten, until mixture thickens.

Scrambled Eggs With Tomatoes.

1 pint tomato pulp
Seasonings (onion, celery or parsley and sweet herbs)
1 tablespoon butter
6 eggs
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon pepper
Brown bread, toasted

Season seedless tomato pulp with onion, celery or parsley and sweet herbs. Place butter in a frying pan and add tomato and when hot, the eggs, slightly beaten, salt and pepper. Stir until contents are of a creamy consistency. Serve with brown bread toast.

Bean-Stuffed Baked Tomatoes.

6 large tomatoes
2 green peppers, chopped
6 slices bacon, cut finely
1 medium size can beans
Salt and pepper

Scald and peel tomatoes, and cut a slice from top of each and scoop out inside. Turn upside down to drain. Fry green peppers and bacon in a frying pan. When slightly brown add beans and drained pulp from inside of tomatoes. Season with salt and pepper and fill tomato shells Bake in a moderate oven, 375 degrees F., for 20 minutes, or until tomatoes are tender. Servings, 6.

15-Month-Old Child Passes In Children's Hospital, Ottawa

There passed away in the Children's Hospital, Ottawa, after a short illness, Jackie, 15-month twin of Mr. and Mrs. Allan Moran of town.

Jackie was removed to the hospital on Tuesday where hopes were held for his recovery until Thursday when as a last resort, a blood transfusion was given. But word arrived at noon for his parents to come as the child was not so well. During their hours at the bedside he seemed to revive and there was hope, but the news reached here on Friday morning of his passing away at 6.20 a.m.

Flowers were received from many friends and relatives, including a spray of baby breath from mother and father.

Jackie's fingers that used to twine
Are only memories left behind;
Jeanie left with us to keep
Is to remind us to repeat:
"God knew best."
