SERVICE, to Us IMPLIES MUCH

Among the things that characterize our service are personal attention to every detail of the funeral arrangement, and little acts of thoughtfulness that serve to lessen the trying strain of the hours before and during the funeral. Quiet efficiency and smoothness are the result. That, we believe, is the kind of service that wins approval.

HENRY'S Shorthand School Ottawa, Ont.

No School in Canada offers a better training, or ensures a more successful future. Henry's leads all others, and ranks among employers as "THE SCHOOL OF HIGHER EFFICIENCY"—a fact borne out by more than 600 pupils who have, since January, 1913, left other Ottawa schools to come to it.

Therefore, it is not surprising that business men, in advertising for stenographers, should specially say, "Graduates of Henry's School preferred."

A Valentine Tea will be held in the Public Library on Tuesday afternoon, February 12th. A musical program will be given during the afternoon. High School orchestra in attendance. Refreshments will be served from 3 to 6 p.m. A committee of the Women's Institute in charge.

ICE HARVEST STARTED

With the very mild weather a couple of weeks ago many had begun to have doubts as to where their supply of ice was going to be obtained, but it seems to have been without reason, as beautiful ice is being taken from the Nation of about the usual thickness. The coming of snow will make it much easier for many to handle their requirements where sleighing was not good.

HEAVY SNOWFALL

With a fall of five or six inches of snow during ast night it begins to look snow during last night it begins to look as if the sleigh was going to cut in on the auto in this district after all, although a number of cars are flashing about town this morning. It will be interesting to former residents to know that there has not been enough snow at any time this season to make good sleighing throughout this district.

THE HOCKEY SITUATION

The hockey situation is getting down to the point where the play-off comes into view. Chesterville is out in front in the Rideau Group and sure of a place in the play-off. Smiths Falls and Perth went into a tie last night when Perth won from Smiths Falls in Perth 3 to 1. Perth has two more games, one with Chesterville and one with Russell, while Smiths Falls has three, two with Chesterville and one with Cornwall, the winning of any one of them would give the Falls the edge over Perth for the play-off berth. Finch is leading the Central Ottawa with two games to go, to-morrow night with Cornwall and Wednesday next with Chesterville, both on their home ice. Russell has two with Cornwall, one at home and one away, and Cornwall will have to come through three times in a row to make the grade.

The winners of the play-off between the first and second teams in each league will play off for the district championship of the Rideau and Central Ottawa leagues.

The games in the Rideau play-off will be played on Feb. 16th and 18th, with the first game in Chesterville with either Perth or Smiths Falls.

THE CURLING BONSPIEL

Last Friday the Chesterville Curling Club held their second annual bonspiel.

Winchester, Morrisburg and Russell clubs each had two rinks entered; Chesterville had three rinks entered, and Alexandria one.

Alexandria club's entry, skipped by Dr. H. L. Cheney, won the first prize and it is no exaggeration to say that the Glengarry Scotchmen were far superior to any other rink entered. They gave the Chesterville boys the best exhibition of curling yet seen on the local rink and thoroughly deserved their win.

Dr. Gorrell's rink from Morrisburg, won second prize in the first competition; Dr. Davey's rink, from Morrisburg, first prize in the second competition, and "Billy" Leonard's rink from Winchester, second prize in the second competition.

The Chesterville and Russell entries were both eliminated. E. L. Bronskill's rink, with G. J. Hunt third, Howard Fulton second, and Thos. Flynn lead, being the only Chesterville entry successful in winning a game.

Incidentally, the Alexandria boys' performance suggests the advisability of having one rink practice together and take part in competitions together. The advantage of having every player on a rink familiar with playing his position and also familiar with the style of play of the other men on his rink is obvious. Our club has never adopted the system of having one rink play together throughout the entire season but it might do so to advantage.

The visitors all expressed themselves as well pleased with their day's sport and want to come to Chesterville for the next bonspiel.

MR. THOS. BELL PASSES AWAY

An old resident of Winchester township, in the person of Mr. Thos. Bell, passed away Saturday last at the home of his son Leonard, a few miles west of Winchester. Mr. Bell was in his 78th year and had passed most of his life in the vicinity of Winchester. He is survived by his widow and three sons, Howard, of Cass Bridge; Adrian and Leonard, of Mountain township. The funeral service was held at the home of Leonard on Monday afternoon at 1.30, where many friends gathered to pay their last tribute to one who was highly thought of in the community.

TALL, BUT TRUE

I read recently a "tall story" told about the hunter in Minnesota who shot a deer in the rear, whereupon the deer swung around so quickly that the bullet came out of its chest and shot the hunter in the arm. This story sounded rather extraordinary to me, but I have one here that I know is absolutely true, and, since it is true I am ready to believe the other man's story.

One of my neighbors, while driving alongside an alfalfa field not long ago, saw something thrashing around some distance out in the field. The man stopped his car and proceeded to investigate. What he found was a bull snake about three feet long that had seized a large hawk by the throat and had two loops of his body around the hawk's neck. The hawk was nearly choked to death, and just then another large hawk flew down to his assistance. The first hawk in his death struggles hooked his claws round the second hawk's leg and the second hawk could not get loose. The snake had his tail wrapped round a bunch of alfalfa, and there he was holding two large hawks to the ground. The man killed the snake and both hawks with a tire tool and brought all three to town to prove his story. There are not many queerer true stories than that.

HUNTING DEER WITH DOGS MAY BE STOPPED IN QUEBEC

Serious consideration is being given by the Quebec Government to the question of prohibiting the hunting of deer with dogs, and also to the question of limiting the size of the day's catch of trout.

Representations have been made to Hon. J. E. Perrault, Minister of Colonization, Mines and Fisheries, to the effect that the time has come when the hunting of deer with dogs should be prohibited. It was learned that the Minister feels that this is the correct view on the question, and it is quite possible that he will bring in the necessary legislation. The difficulty at present with amending the law to prohibit the hunting of deer with dogs is that this practice is still allowed in Ontario.

The Province of Quebec regulates the day's catch of bass, but while there is plenty of bass in various parts of the province, it is trout for which the province is famous, and there is no limitation to the catch.

Russell Moves Up With Win Over Finch

Finch, senior league leaders of the Central Ottawa Valley, made their second appearance of the season in Russell arena Monday against the fast stepping Russell sextette. Russell won by one goal to nothing before one of the largest crowds seen in their own arena this season.

The first period was fast with both teams playing fast combination.

In the second period the visitors were trying hard to make a count but there were horse shoes hanging all around the locals' net as time after time the visitors' forward boys were in on top of Carther but he saved cleverly. In this session Referee Wagner sent six of the players to the cooler for roughing.

The third period was more exciting as each team were sending their men up the ice in an endeavour to break the dealock when D. Kinchen caught a pass from Villeneu-e in front of the visitors' cage, and beat McDonald for the first and only goal of the game. Finch pressed hard to even the count but Carther was on the job. Local stars were Rombough, the Kinchen brothers, and Carther in the nets. For the visitors every man played his best.

TOO GOOD FOR SCRAP HEAP

Renfrew Mercury — A Toronto newspaper contained the other day a cut of six steam fire-engines just scrapped there. They were perfectly good machines, capable of throwing powerful streams and were as serviceable as when leaving the factory years ago, but motor truck pumpers had put them on the shelf so to speak. Why don't villages make a purchase of the many engines being discarded by towns and cities today? Buying them at what junk dealers pay for them would be remarkably cheap. The six Toronto engines cast aside were, it was said, to be disposed of as junk. With chemical engines to be used at the outset, and with steam fire engines to fall back on should the chemicals fail to check the blaze, these old steamers would stave off disastrous blazes as long as provided with plenty of water. They would constitute a real asset in many communities.

Smiths Falls 4: Perth 2

Playing before the largest Smiths Falls crowd of the season the home team handed their bitter rivals from Perth a 4-2 set back in a scheduled Rideau Group fixture and stepped into second place in the league standing by virtue of their win. The game was an important one and there was a crowd of 2,500 present including many Perth supporters.

The Falls were fighting with their backs to the wall and they presented a starry display that sent the fans wild. The match was a hectic, lightning fast encounter that produced plenty of thrills and gave spectators a glimpse of Rideau hockey at the best.

Orville Cookman, the railroaders' star left wing man was the hero of the contest, bagging a brace of sparkling counters and giving a brilliant display on his wing. Tommie Hamilton and Archie Campbell, smooth skating forwards, also played gilt edged hockey and garnered a goal apiece.

"Tex" Brady, veteran Perth defence man, and Johnnie Howie starred for the Crescents.

Both teams scored in the first session, Cookman opened the scoring after 15 minutes when he took a loose puck at centre, dashed in and flipped the rubber into the cage. Brady tied it up a minute later on a sweet solo rush that saw him score from a different angle. Three goals came in quick succession in the middle stanza. Tommie Hamilton took Cookman's pass after 12 minutes and beat Dickson from close in. Twenty-five seconds later, Cookman grabbed another loose puck and circled Brady to hit the hemp and put the locals two up. From the face-off Johnnie Howie streaked in and twitched the cords with a smart shot. Campbell concluded the scoring in the third stanza when he worked from end to end to score from close in.

Declares Religion Ennobles Thinking

Mr. C. Ritchie-Bell, minister of St. Andrew's Presbyterian church here, in his prefactory remarks to his sermon on "The Drifter" last Sunday morning, spoke of the vaule of religion and asked why the world wanted it, and why one should not be a "Drifter" in his attitude to religion.

"Because it ennobles our thinking through the effort to understand the infinite purpose which interprets the meaning of our existence," he said, answering this question.

"Because it lifts us to finer levels of moral efforts and achievements when we seek the guidance of God as this is revealed through the inner conscience and corroborated by the experience of religious men through all the centuries.

"Because when, through its difficulties and contradictions, life seems most a mystery, religion brings us sufficient light of immediate conviction to show us the path of courage of faithfulness and hope.

"Because in those critical tests, when our own strength might fail before great difficulties and when we are tempted to question, 'What's the use?' religion gives us again that sense of alliance of a greater power in whose strength the best we believe in and the best we strive for will win through.

"Such is at least a part of the meaning of religion, and, for my part, I believe that the supreme way of attaining it is through an increasing effort to understand and to follow Jesus Christ, who said, 'I am the way, the truth, and the light.'"

In the evening Mr. Ritchie-Bell delivered the first of his series of sermons on "Problems in which Young People are interested." There were large congregations at both diets of public worship.

The ministry of music was under the direction of Miss Gertrude Weegar.

A slightly inebriated gentleman lurched into a cafe late one night and sat down at one of the tables. Holding the menu card upside down, he gravely inspected it for several moments. Suddenly, in an excited manner, he yelled, "Waiter, Waiter! C'mere, quick; send for the manager; thersh been a terrible mistake made, a terrible mistake!"

"What is it, sir?" gravely demanded the waiter.

"'Jus' look at this," shouted the drunk, wildly waving the menu, "those darn fool printers have printed thish thing upside down!"

WHEN HOPES ARE SHATTERED

Eric thinks his team the best
And so does cousin Arthur.
They both are good and that is why
The crowd comes to watch them.

The Morewood boys are pretty fast,
And so are Tib and Arnold
But Mike and Wes can travel so
That Arthur feels like rollin'.

Eric is a wise old head
And reads the rule book daily;
And that is why he wondered so
When Kellogg helped the goalie.

And Sammy boy, hard luck I guess!
Gets hit right on the kisser,
He rolls and kicks and bawls a bit
And George wonders how Ray could miss it.

Poulin is a trickey boy
And often gives the shoulder,
But Eric always grants he should
Because he's very much older.

Mike is the boy that's always there
To get the second wallop,
And when they use him pretty rough
He takes it on the gallop.

In future days, so say the bards,
When Fred goes winging crazy,
The little boy in yellow and black
Will look to save his daisy.

George, as a last resort of all,
Is good when goods are needed.
He's always there, and never fails
To make the hard ones easy.

Now, Mr. Editor and staff
This line has been demanded
When the tri-color goes to Chesterville
They don't leave empty-handed.

We play the game, we play it fair,
It may be rough and tumble,
But if our friends are tender ware
We'll have to let them grumble.

—A Morewood Rooter.

Loving tribute was paid to the memory of Mrs. A. W. Beach of Winchester Saturday afternoon, when friends and relatives gathered at the family residence, where an impressive funeral service was conducted by Rev. J. A. Waddell, of the United church. In the death of Mrs. Beach, a kindly neighbor, a sympathetic friend and a loving mother was taken suddenly, leaving to mourn her loss, her husband, A. W. Beach; two daughters, Mrs. Ira Shaver of Mountain, and Miss Erma Beach, at home, also one son, Dr. F. Beach of Moosomin, Sask. There are also seven sisters: Mrs. Mahlon Bailey and Mrs. Joseph Cass, of Winchester; Mrs. Sherwood, of Vancouver, BC.; Mrs. Bradley of Smiths Falls; Mrs. Robinson, of Toronto; Mrs. Judson, of Lansing, Mich., and Mrs. McIntosh, of Hillsdale, Mich.; also one brother, Mr. C. B. Dixon of Toronto.. The many beautiful floral offerings bore testimony to the high esteem in which the deceased was held. Interment was made in Maple Ridge cemetery.

In Olden Times.

Professor—Can you give me an example of a commercial appliance used in ancient times?

Student—Yes, sir, the loose leaf system used in the Garden of Eden.

You Said It.

Liza, the negro cook, answered the telephone one morning, and a cheerful voice inquired, "What number is this?"

Liza was in no mood for trifling questions, and said with some asperity, "You-all ought to know. You done call it."

Presentation Near Crysler

On Thursday afternoon, January 31, Mrs. C. S. Johnstone entertained a number of friends in honor of Miss Jen and Miss Annie Johnstone before leaving for their new home in Ottawa.

After the reading of a suitable address by Mrs. J. A. Feeley, Mrs. C. S. Johnstone, in behalf of the Crysler branch of the Women's Auxiliary and St. John's Guild, presented the Misses Johnstone with a beautiful pearl-on-amber brush, comb and mirror set in a handsome case.

Miss Johnstone ,though taken by surprise, on behalf of herself and Miss Annie thanked the ladies for their lovely gift and hoped that they would all make it a point to come and see them some time in their new home.

Mrs. J. R. Cockburn at the piano, entertained those present with a variety of old time selections, and all joined most heartily in singing "For They are Jolly Good Fellows."

Covers were laid for twenty-four and all did justice to a beautiful tea given by the hostess, after which the guests wended their several ways home feeling that sociability after all is surely good for all of us.

Will It Help Business To Mark Time?

By 1934 Ontario and Quebec will need a million telephones and the Bell Telephone Company wants new money to provide them.

The company does not want any money from Parliament. It only wants permission to try to sell new shares to investors.

The investors will supply the money if they are allowed to. If they are not allowed to, the telephone system must mark time.

In 48 years the telephone company has never suggested nor received a government grant; it only asks freedom to take further part in Canada's progress.

"JERRY AULT" DIES FROM INJURIES IN CRASH

Going into a tail spin while flying low in a Government training machine, John Gerald Ault, 22, of Ottawa, crashed and was fatally injured at the Royal Canadian Air Force training field at Camp Borden, Ont., Tuesday afternoon.

"Jerry" Ault was a well-known football and hockey player. He was a star of the Ottawa Senior Hockey League in former years, and in 1928 was a member of the Camp Borden rugby squad of the Ontario Union.

Details of the accident were meagre. It was learned, however, that Ault, who was a pilot in training, was practicing at the time of the crash and was flying "solo." The young aviator sustained a factured thigh, fractured arm and possible concussion or other head injuries from which he died.

A BAD-MEDICINE HUNT

January of 1878 in northern Montana was a month of the chinooks. The warm weather enabled Jackson, Apsi and myself to skin the several hundred wolves that had so long laid frozen round our poisoned baits; Apsi's mother and sister were kept busy fleshing, and pegging the hides out to dry. In every direction from the Blackfoot Camp to Cow Creek the plains were covered with deer and antelope; so we all remained there instead of moving down to the Missouri as the chiefs had intended to do earlier in the season.

On the evening of January 28, according to my little old notebook, Jackson and I were guests in Apsi's lodge. He had invited us to a little feast; his mother and sister had cooked some buffalo boss ribs, some flour cakes fried in marrow grease, some servis berries and a pot of tea. The meat was not fat and Apsi made complaint about it.

"Well, then, why don't you kill some fat meat?" his mother asked. "I am not the hunter, you know. I have for a long time been wanting some fat bighorn meat. It would be a good change from buffalo and antelope meat."

"Oh, yes, brother," his sister chimed in, "do kill a fat bighorn for us!"

"Listen to that!" said Apsi. "They ask me to take time to hunt bighorns when we have all we can do to look after our wolf baits."

"But what is one day—or two days?" I put in. "I should like some bighorn meat. Let's go kill one or two of the animals."

We agreed to go on a bighorn hunt the next day. The were some of the animals on the bare tops of the nearby Little Rockies, but, as the hunters of the camp went up that way every day, we decided to go down to the breaks of the Missouri below the mouth of Cow Creek, where the game was still more plentiful and was undisturbed.

We rode out from the camp early next morning, taking with us two pack horses, some bedding, a little food and a pot for making tea. Our route was straight down the valley of Cow Creek on the trail the Nez Perces had followed a few months before. It was really a wagon road. In low-water time the steamboats could ascend the river only as far as Cow Island; thence bull and mule teams hauled their freight to Fort Benton.

We went down to the Missouri, and then, taking to the ice, which was mushy on top and good footing for the horses, we passed Cow Island and made camp in the bottom jest below it on the north side. A grove of cottonwoods afforded good shelter for us; out on the flat there was feed for the horses. A large herd of buffalo ran out of the bottom when we entered, and in the timber we raised a number of white-tail deer; Jackson killed one of them, a dry doe, and fat. As the last rays of the setting sun painted yellow the tops of the black rock buttes and cliffs overlooking the bottom, we saw upon one of them a small band of bighorns, sharply outlined against the blue sky background. The sight augured well for the morrow.

"Perhaps we can kill what we want early in the morning, and get home before night," said Apsi.

We sat late round the camp fire, roasting and eating ribs of the deer. Apsi had the fire going again before daylight, and after a nasty meal of meat and tea we set out on foot for the bad lands. The sun was rising as we passed out of the timber and repicketed our horses. Just beyond them four or five mule deer were traveling in a single file back to the breaks, and at the lower end of the bottom were a dozen or more elk and several buffalo.

We separated after moving the horses, Jackson heading for the breaks at the upper end of the bottom, Apsi for those at its lower end, while I took a middle course. Soon after leaving the flat I lost sight of them.

It was rough country that I soon got into, as bad as I ever tackled in the Rocky Mountains. Here and there were treacherous trap-rock cliffs to scale, and some of them were unclimbable. There was nothing to do then but turn to the right or left, slide into wash after wash and climb their steep sides,until I could find a break in the wall. Where there was no rock the footing was bad. The bad-land volcanic ash-earth was crusted on top, and soft and powdery for six inches beneath the crust; before I had gone a mile my steps began to lag.

It was the middle of the morning when, wet with perspiration and just about fagged out, I came to the foot of a cliff well up toward the summit of the breaks, or, in other words, the level of the plain. I had passed many bighorn signs, and here under this cliff was a hard-beaten runway of the animals; all about were oval, pawed-out depressions in the ash-earth where they had laid down to rest and sleep. I crossed the trail and sat down with my back to the cliff; no sooner had I lightly leaned against it than rectangular pieces of rock came tumbling around me. I saw I had broken down the walled up entrance to a small cave six or seven feetlong, about three feet high and five feet deep. On the floor of it stretched a human skeleton. I laid down my rifle and crawled inside to examine it.

Judging by the inch or so of gray, powdery dust on the cave floor, and the coating of it on the bones, the grim remains must have lain there a long, long time; several centures, perhaps. I blew the dust rrom the scalp, and found in the top of it a jagged hole. Of clothing, or of weapons or implements of any description, there was not the least sign, but I thought their might be something covered by the dust, and I began to scrape it out with a straight-edged piece of rock. Clouds of it rose and nearly choked me, but I kept on scraping, removing bones and all, and presently I uncovered a yellow flint knife about five inches in length, that had been deposited on the outer side of the remains and close to the hip. On the inner side, close to the shoulder, were sixteen black obsidian arrow points about three-quarters of an inch long, very narrow and rounding, and slightly barbed.

They had all lain together, the points all one way, and must have been attached to shafts when deposited there; but nothing remained of the wood except yellowish streaks in the gray dust covering the floor. I laid the points and the knife on the ground outside the cave and sat down to examine them.

My studies were broken by a shot; presently came another. Both were not far east of me and a little higher than my position. I stuffed the arrow points and knife into a coat pocket, picked up my rifle and listened. Apsi of course had done the shooting, and I was sure he had killed, else why the second shot so long after the first? I was about to rise and work over in that direction when I hear the thud! thud! thud! of jumping feet. An instant later a dozen and more bighorns came flying toward me along the trail. A big ewe led the band. I blatted loudly, and she stopped short with the others crowding close behind her. I fired at her brisket, well up, and with a tremendous leap she pitched off the trail, struggled to regain her feet and rolled on down the slope to the foot of a boulder. The others whirled and tore back the way they had come. I did not fire again. The ewe was all the meat I had cared for. I soon had her dressed and ready to drag down to the edge of the bottom.

Before I had gone far with my quarry, I saw Apsi coming down the next slope to the east; he too had a bighorn in tow. We signalled to each other, and a little later came together in the bottom of a deep coulie into which both ridges merged. Just below was another cliff; we dragged the animals to the edge of that and sat down. Apsi had killed his meat, a fine two-year-old ram, from the band out of which I had picked the ewe, and, as I surmise, had at first crippled it and then finished it with a second shot.

I told of my discovery of the burial cave and produced the flint knife and handful of arrowheads.

At sight of them Apsi sprang away from me. "Take them back to the place and leave them there!" he cried, and in his voice was real terror. "You know that robbing the dead is about the worst thing one can do; it never fails to bring bad luck; death even. Do you suppose the ghost of that ancient one will not make revenge for what you have done?"

"If he does, I shall be the one to suffer—not you," I answered. "But I shall not suffer; never yet was there a white person who saw a ghost or was troubled by one."

"Oh, I know, I know," he cried, his face dark with misery, his hands gripped together. "You and your kind do not see the ghosts because you have no medicine and are blind to them. All the same, ghosts are; and they do to you just what they do to us; they steal to your couch in the night and tap you with their unseen, unfelt hands and give you dreadful sickness. They give you bad luck in many ways, especially if they be the ghosts of enemies. But, you, you whites, you cannot see, you do not believe, and you lay your troubles to other causes. Oh, my brother, take back the things, or, at least, drop them here." And with that he pushed his ram over the edge of the cliff and descended somewhat to the right of it where the wall was broken down. I did likewise and soon overtook him. "Did you throw them away?" he asked.

"Apsi, brother, I can't do that," I answered and explained to him as well as I could that I wanted to send the things to the Smithsonian Institution near the Great Father's house, where were rooms full of ancient weapons, tools, pottery, and the like, which wise white men were ever collecting and studying in order to learn something about the peoples who made them. But it was as if he had not heard. He neither answered nor looked at me and very soberly started down the slope.

"But many of the Blackfeet have these ancient stone knives and arrow heads and do not fear them," I said, when we again stopped to rest.

"Ha! But that is different. Those that they keep came not from graves. They have been handed down from father to son ever since they were made in the long ago."

He did not again ask me to throw away the knife and the points, but the look he gave me was intensely reproachful.

It was long past noon when we reached the foot of the slope with our bighorns. The long drag had pretty well denuded them of hair, especially along the back and thighs, but the hides were not damaged. I was glad of that, as I wanted to tan them for a shirt. Bighorn leather, or so-called buckskin, is the best of all for that purpose, as it is light and of even quality.

After another short rest we left the animals there at the foot of the breaks and started across the bottom toward camp, wending our way among clumps of sagebrush and greasewood higher than our heads. This growth extended only half way to the river and timber; the rest of the flat was fine grass to the edge of the sage belt. We presently came to the edge of the sage belt. Apsi, who was in the lead, stopped short. "The horses! They are gone!" he exclaimed.

Sure enough, they were gone. Only a short time before, when we were approaching the foot of the slope, they had been in sight and feeding quietly. I suggested that Jackson had come in ahead of us and driven them down to water.

"That is possible, but we will just wait here and see if it is so," Apsi said, and we drew back into cover of the brush.

We must have stood there half an hour waiting to see the horses brought out of the timber. They did not come; Apsi said a war party had taken them. I was still of the opinion that Jackson had them in the camp and all saddled, awaiting our arrival. But my partner shook his head.

"No, Sik-si-kai-kwan is not there, elsa he would be cooking; we would see smoke. Anyhow, we must take no chances. The one thing for us to do is to sneak up through this brush to the upper end of the bottom, and then down through the timber until we can see our camping place—and whatever is there. But, oh, my brother, be wise. Take my words: for my sake, now, before we start, throw away those things that you have in your pocket."

There was no resisting that appeal. I took out the flint knife and the arrow points and tossed them down at the foot of a big sage. As they cinked together Apsi straightened his shoulders with a shrug, as if he were casting off a heavy burden, and a bright smile lit up his face. He started on; I, following and without his seeing me, tossed my handkerchief into the bush to mark the place where my relics lay. I had no mind to lose them; at some future time I would recover them.

We were not long traveling up the bottom to the river, where point of grove and belt of sagebrush met. Slowly and cautiously we started down through the timber. I still believed that all this circuitous sneaking and spying was needless and that Jackson was in camp with the horses. Then, not seventy-five yards ahead of us, a gun boomed, a puff of smoke burst from a clump of willows, and with a low cry of pain Apsi dropped his rifle and swung half round, clapping his hand to his left shoulder. As he did so another shot rang out and a bullet spatted into a tree behind which I was dodging. I saw the smoke from that gun also and, more dimly, the man behind it, partially screened by willows.

Once, twice, three times I fired at him as fast as I could work lever and trigger, and that was pretty fast. At the first shot he sprang from the willows and ran toward a larger and thicker clump from which his comrade had fired on Apsi. My second shot also went wild, but when the third shot slipped from the magazine into the barrel I had somewhat recovered control of my nerves. When I pulled the trigger, the man almost dropped, then straightened up for a couple of jumps and finally smashed down into the willows he was heading for.

All this happened in a few seconds. While I was shooting, Apsi was recovering his rifle and circling around to give me free sweep at the enemy.

"Ha! You hit him that time!" he cried as he passed me. "Come on, there are more of them; our only chance is to make a stand on the island."

By the way he ran I knew that he was not badly hurt. He sprinted at a good pace to the end of the bottom, and up the ice on the river to the lower point of Cow Island. A half-dozen shots were fired at us before we reached the thick willows, but all went wild. Once in the shelter of the brush we turned and looked back; not one of our pursuers was in sight, but we well knew that they were lying somewhere along the edge of the shore from which we had come, and were trying to plan how to overcome us and lift our scalps.

"How badly are you hurt?" I asked.

"Oh, it is nothing." Apsi pulled his shirt out from the top of his shoulder. Between the point of it and the neck was a deep gash in the flesh, and the collar bone was broken. Some blood was trickling from the wound and I made him go to the farther side of the point, where water was running on the ice, and wash it while I stood watch. He soon returned, cheerful as ever despite the pain and the fact that he could not use his left arm. We began to discuss the predicament we were in. The enemy was, of course, a war party of Assiniboins. No other tribe made a practice of going on raids in the winter time; and no other warriors on the wide plains were anywhere near so expert as they in sneaking round and taking their intended victims unawares. We dreaded the coming night.

Where was Jackson? Would he come heedlessly down to the bottom and across it to camp and fall into their hands? There was a chance that he wouldn't Some of the enemy would be waiting there for him; there were three riding saddles and two pack saddles and five horses in the outfit. and by that they would know that there were three in our party. But there was the chance that from a point somewhere up in the breaks Jackson had heard the shooting and seen the enemy pursuing us. We hugged that hope, for we could in no way aid him or apprise him of what lay concealed in the apparently deserted bottom.

"Brother, I see one possible way for us to get away from the enemy," Apsi suddenly exclaimed. Farther up under the shelter of the grove at the upper end of the island, we may be able to reach the south shore without being seen. If we succeed, we can work our way up the river to a point away above Cow Creek, and then cross and strike out for home."

"Let's try it," I said, and we hurried through the willows up into the grove. From there we backed out on the ice, keeping the grove between us and the whole length of the bottom below, and so across the narrow channel to the south shore. There we halted in the brush for a few minutes and, seeing no one in pursuit, went on. By three o'clock we were again on the north side of the river and at dusk walked into the Cow Creek trail, certain that no one was following us. At midnight Apsi declared that he could go no farther, so weak was he from loss of blood and pain. But he insisted that I should go on and rouse the camp, and I did so.

I don't know how I ever accomplished it, but I got within five miles of home without ever stopping; and there, as day was breaking, I met Jackson with about a hundred Blackfeet riding like mad to our relief. From the top of the breaks he had seen us running for the island, seen the Assiniboins shooting at us, and at once had started for help. I told them where Apsi was, and one of the party agreed to give him a lift home. Another turned back with me. Apsi came in at noon; Kipp dressed and bandaged his wound and shoulder. Then we slept, never stirring until the next morning. The shouts and victory songs of the returning party roused us, and we hurried out to see what they had brought. They had every one of our horses, and the scalp of every one of the Assiniboins, ten of them, who, the day before, had come so near to murdering us.

But we lost our fine bighorn meat. The wolves got it. Some weeks afterward I recovered the flint knife and the arrow points—only to lose them in a flood the following summer. I did not tell Apsi about it. He always insisted that, if I had not thrown them away when I did, we should never have made our escape from the enemy.

JUNIOR RED CROSS

The sixteenth regular meeting of the Chesterville Peptimists was held on February 1st in Room "A". The Secretary passed the membership buttons after which the minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved. The third programme on "The Care of the Sick" was under "Emergencies." Betty Bolster received the merit badge for the best prepared part on the programme. The mite box donations amounted to 29 cents. We closed our meeting by singing the National Anthem.
