HENRY'S Shorthand School Ottawa, Ont.

No School in Canada offers a better training, or ensures a more successful future. Henry's leads all others, and ranks among employers as "THE SCHOOL OF HIGHER EFFICIENCY"—a fact borne out by more than 600 pupils who have, since January, 1913, left other Ottawa schools to come to it.

Therefore, it is not surprising that business men, in advertising for stenographers, should specially say, "Graduates of Henry's School preferred."

Ball Game At Winchester Ends In Squabble

The opening ball game in the Dundas County League at Winchester last night between Chesterville and Winchester ended in a suabble at the end of the first half of the seventh innings over the third run scored by Chesterville which gave them the lead 3 to 2.

Up to the end of the sixth innings a pretty fair ball game had been staged, Morrow, for the home team, held Chesterville scoreless while Winchester gathered a counter off Craig, who has cast his lot with Chesterville, in the second and repeated in the fifth. In the seventh Chesterville got to Morrow and whaled him for several safeties and had scored two runs when Watt landed on third and attempted to score on a wild heave there to catch him. The base line was blocked and after interference by Winchester enthusiasts, the base umpire called Watt out, which would have left the score tied. Before the tangle was straightened out it became too dark to proceed, with the score at even innings two to nothing in favour of Winchester. However, there is said to be a league ruling that seven innings must be completed to constitute a game. If that is the case the game will have to be played over, otherwise if the score reverts to even innings, Winchester will have won the game by the score of 2 to 0.

Finch Residents Have Bear Hunt

Some citizens of Finch town went on a bear hunt Monday afternoon, a thing the oldest resident barely remembers having happened before. At noon a report came that a fairly large black bear was seen about a quarter of a mile east of the village on L. Hutt's farm.

Immediately a few of the town hunters, accompanied by four High school boys, left to search the nearby woods in an attempt to bring down the northern visitor. The hunters were joined by some of the local farmers.

After combing the woods and almost giving up hopes, he was again sighted in a thick cedar brush about one-half mile north of the town. This put new life in the hunt and a party was despatched to the north side of the woods in an effort to drive the bear out into the open in order to give the marksmen a good shot. The effort was successful and Colin Cameron brought him down. The carcass was taken to Finch and caused considerable excitement.

Chesterville Boy Injured In Fall From Tree

Saturday afternoon, while spending the holiday with a party of Ottawa friends in a canoe trip on the Rideau river, Hubert Dixon, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Dixon of this place, fell from a tree which he had climbed to secure dry branches with which to kindle a fire for the preparation of dinner for the party. On placing his weight on a dead limb without warning, it snapped, letting Hubert fall twelve or fifteen feet to the ground. For a few minutes he was rendered unconscious while members of the party rendered first aid and he was quickly taken to Ottawa and a physician summoned who, after examination, found no broken bones, but the boy was suffering from shock and bruises and could not assist himself.

On an impromptu stretcher made with paddles and coats he was taken to Ottawa and subsequently brought to his home here, where another examination confirmed that made in Ottawa. While Hubert has been confined to his bed since the accident, he is now making progress towards recovery and is expected to be around shortly.

Bill Tate Winner Of Four Mile Race

Bill Tate added another middle distance race to his long list of victories in Ottawa, capturing the four and one-fifth mile road race on Saturday morning. Phil Hattie, of the Ottawa Y. M. C. A., gave Tate a close run for the honours and finished in second place, five yards behind the leader.

The race was staged under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. track club and started and finished at the Y. M. C. A. The course was from the "Y" down Laurier to the Driveway, out to the Rideau Aquatic Club and return by way of Elgin street.

Bob Blakely took the lead in the early stages of the grind, but made way to Tate a mile after the start. The winner, running with a sore foot, was extended to the limit by Hattie for the last two miles, but his strong finish helped him down the Y.M.C.A. star. MacAllister ran a close third, while Leif Graun finished fourth. Art Shieman was fifth and R. Simmons sixth.

Election of officers then took place and resulted as follows:

1st Vice Pres.—Mrs. B. Loughridge

Plans were made for having the summer speaker, Mrs. Ryward, of Uxbridge, Ont., who will address the meeting on June 11th, at 2 o'clock at the home of Mrs. H. R. Faulkner. An invitation is cordially extended to all the ladies of the community.

The meeting closed with the National Anthem.

Bowling Club Notes

To-morrow night (Friday) at the Bowling Club will be inaugurated the first "chocolate" competition of the season when it is expected a goodly number will be on hand. This makes a suitable time for new members of the club to break in on the game. The rinks are chosen by draw with the new members mixed in with the more experienced and given an excellent opportunity to learn the game.

Entries are now in order for the local tournament next Tuesday. Any four members may constitute a rink and enter. If you desire to play, don't wait to be hunted up; get your rink together and go to it.

Crops Look Good

Notwithstanding the unseasonably cool weather since the holiday, with a slight touch of frost Sunday night, crops do not seem to have suffered, with perhaps the exception of early planted corn which has not done as expected on account of unfavourable conditions.

Throughout the coutry there are some wonderful stands of clover with every appearance of a bountiful yield of hay, bearing out the old adage that a wet May means long hay.

Not only are the sown crops looking good, but weeds or near-weeds are also becoming luxuriant. Where do dandelions come in? Fodder, tonic, or just a nuisance. Conditions seem particularly favourable to them this season, whole fields of them may be seen in different sections as a carpet of gold from fence to fence.

Gives Leg Muscle For Skull Operation

Montreal. — Miss Sarah Carey, daughter of Robert D. Carey, former governor of Wyoming, is seriously ill in the Royal Victoria Hospital, in Montreal, following an operation for an old fracture of the skull. Mr. Carey, who volunteered pieces of his leg muscle, when it became necessary during the course of his daughter's operation to insert pieces of muscle under the skull to prevent a hemorrhage, is resting comfortably awaiting the healing of the slight wound.

Village of Arden Puzzled

Arden village, North Frontenac, has a mystery. Some time ago a stranger, driving a heavy motor truck, deposited two separate consignments consisting of four 10 gallon cans of automobile oil with residents. The apparent owner of this oil led the farmers to believe that he would return very shortly in order to claim his property when, it was understood, he would pay a fair rental for storage and care, but he never reappeared. This information has been given to Provincial Officer Cubbe. Some of the residents adhere to the opinion that the big British airship, R-100, will follow the most direct route over Canada, and that the oil is for use in an emergency by the engineers of the craft, while others believe that Arden was considered a logical spot for the rendezvous of a gang of bandits.

Flour By Shipload To Feed Shriners

Toronto.—Some 1,400 tons of flour were shipped into Toronto over the week-end to help feed the Shriners who are gathering there next month. The flour, which was brought in for the Oglivie mills by the Willow Bay and the Beach Bay, both Tree Line boats, is specially ordered by bakers who will be supplying the Shriners. The Willow Bay is returning to the head of the lakes for another load.

Grain is still flowing freely, according to Gordon Price of the Canada Steamship Lines, who reports that two of the company's boats, the Barrie and the Penetang, which have lain in Toronto harbour all Winter, have been placed in service.

Two Killed by Autos

Brockville, Ont.—Traffic accidents claimed two victims near Brockville over the week end. W. E. Johnston, aged 50, was killed while walking along the highway near Lansdowne Saturday. He was struck by a car driven by Damon Smith, of Cataraqui who told the police that his vision had been obscured by the headlight glare of an approaching auto.

Five-year-old Russell Reynolds, of Addison village was knocked down and killed late Saturday when he darted out in front of a car driven by Kenneth Gray, Brockville. The child was walking on the side of the road with a brother and two other companions. He tried to cross the highway when the car was only a few feet away. The driver swerved the car sharply but failed to avoid the boy.

Average Lifetimes

The country which leads the world in the average lifetime of its people is not in either Europe or America, but in New Zealand, where at the beginning of this decade, a male child at birth can look forward to 63 years of life and a female to over 65 years, according to the statistics offered by Louis I. Doublin, in his article "Can We Extend the Life Span" in the May Number of Harper's Magazine.

In Australia the expectation of life is two or three years less, but is, nevertheless, higher than that of any country in either America or Europe. At the other end of the scale stands India, where the expectation of life reaches the amazingly low figure of 22 years for males and 23 years for females, a figure about equal to that of the people of Rome under the Empire.

In the United States the expectation of life is about 59 years, being a little less than that figure for males and a little more for females. There has been an extension of 9 years between the years 1900 and 1927. In Europe Denmark has the best standing as shown by the fact that its men may expect to live 60 years and its women about 62 years.

Journey of R-100 Again Put Over

Britain's giant dirigible, R-100, will not leave for Canada before the end of June, according to advice received by J. A. Wilson, Controller of Civil Aviation, by cable from Great Britain. The delay of one month in the departure of the R-100 is given as "minor repairs for which material is not immediately available, and which will require to be manufactured specially for the airship."

The Way of a Man.

He dashed into the police station at midnight, explaining that his wife had been missing since eight o'clock in the morning, and asking that a search be made for her.

"Her description?" said the sergeant, "Height?"

"I—I don't know!"

"Color of eyes?"

"Er—average, I expect."

"Do you know how she was dressed?"

"I expect she wore her coat and hat. She took the dog with her."

"What kind of a dog?"

"Brindle bull terrier, weight fourteen and a half pounds, four dark blotches on his body, shading from grey to white. Round, blackish spot over the left eye, white stub tail, three white legs, and right front leg brindled, all but the toe. A small nick in the left ear, a silver-lined collar, with—"

"That'l do!" gasped the sergeant. "We'll find the dog!"

A Snappy Comeback.

An American walked up to a street fruit-seller's barrow in London and picked up a large lemon.

"It that the largest apple you fellows grow over here?"

"Put that grape down!" snapped the coster.

A good thing to do with people who are always asking for a loan is to leave them alone.

Weed Control Suggestions

By John D. McLeod, Provincial Weed Inspector for Eastern Ontario.

The Weed Control Act will be more rigidly enforced during the coming summer. This will apply to all noxious weeds but particular emphasis will be placed on Perennial Sow Thistle. Owing to the creeping nature of the root stalk and to the fact that seeds are blown long distances by the wind Perennial Sow Thistle is the worst weed we have on our farms at the present time.

Methods of Control.

Sow Thistle thrives best in damp soil, therefore efficient underdrainage is one of the first and most important factors in control of this weed.

Summer fallowing where practical is efficient, providing all growth is kept down during the Summer. If necessary Summer fallowing may be followed by a late smother crop such as buckwheat or rape for fall pasture.

Dry Cleaning Method.

Sow Thistle is in its weakest condition just before ripening seed. Hay fields may be cut a little early and immediately ploughed rather deep. Providing the weather is dry the land should not be touched for three weeks or longer, providing no growth appears. After the land is well dried out during the hot days of the Summer, cultivation hay be practiced till late in the Fall. Land should be left for the winter well ridged up so that the frost can further continue the destruction of the roots. Where fall wheat or rye is grown these crops may be sown late in August or early in September.

A spring or stiff-toothed cultivator is the best implement to combat sow thistle. The disc only serves to cut up the roots and make them more prolific.

Couch, Scutch, or Twitch Gress.

The only two efficient methods of controlling scutch grass are deep summer fallowing immediately after haying and the use of root crops.

Summer fallowing should be done with a stiff-toothed cultivator. This will bring the roots to the surface where they can be dragged out with the harrows and burned. With hoed crops thorough cultivation before planting and careful hoeing and scuffling during the growing season are very essential.

Every farmer has his own problems with regard to killing weeds. General recommendations only can be given. Each farmer must study the weeds on his farm, and learn whether they are annuals of perennials. Most annuals can be destroyed by allowing the seeds to sprout and then destroy them with shallow cultivation. Perennials with creeping root stalks, after ploughing down, must not be allowed to show green during the rest of the Summer or their strength will be renewed and efforts on the part of the farmer wasted.

Weeds in old and rough pastures are the most difficult to control. Where cultivation is impossible sheep will often keep down the weeds; otherwise cutting with a scythe before going to seed is the only means.

No weeds should be allowed to go to seed. Road Superintendents have given instructions to cut all weeds from fence to fence on all roads. Threshing machine operators should exercise more care in cleaning their machines in moving them from place to place. Destroy all weed seeds cleaned from grain. Do not take a chance on feeding them to the chickens. They are bound to get back on the land.

A weed inspector or adviser has been appointed in every muncipality. He is placed there to assist farmers with their weed problems. He is also appointed to protect the man who is trying to control weeds against the careless farmer who allows his weeds to mature and blow seeds over the neighbouring farms. Secure the bulletin "Weeds of Ontario" from your Agricultural Representative.

Pilot Is Killed In Crash Near Ottawa

Ottawa.—Pilot Sergeant R. W. Pike, of the Royal Canadian Air Force, met death near here early Tuesday afternoon when the aeroplane he was flying from Montreal crashed to earth. The cause of the accident, which resulted in almost compete demolition of the machine, has not been determined.

Sergeant Pike is a native of Vancouver and was in his 21st year. His home in Vancouver is located at 3307 37th avenue west. He enlisted with R.C.A.F. as a mechanic in 1929, and was connected with the Ottawa air station at Rockcliffe

The young pilot was flying a new Curtiss-Reid Rambler 'plane when he met death. He was to deliver the machine at the Rockcliffe aerodrome, having piloted it from the manufacturing plant at Montreal that morning.

Another member of the R. C. A. F., Sergt. F. Ewart, accompanied him in a similar machine. When they were still some distance east of the capital, a third flyer, Sergt. Harry Cobb, piloting another Government owned 'plane, joined the pair in the Ramblers and they flew to Rockcliffe aerodrome in triple formation. On reaching their objective, Cobb broke formation and landed safely. After circling the field Ewart came down to earth. Pike's machine appeared to get out of control as he nosed it down preparatory to landing, and it started its tragic descent.

The ill-fated youth made a desperate leap for life when the 'plane neared the ground. As it hurtled close by a line of trees fringing the field, he hurled himself from the cockpit, apparently in an effort to break his fall by landing in the branches of one of the trees. He missed the tree by a few feet, however, and fell to earth, mortally wounded.

An error of judgment in underestimating his gliding distance to the runways of the aerodrome, is believed by air officials to have been the primary cause of the crash.

The body will be taken to Vancouver where a full Air Force funeral will be accorded. A short service was conducted in Ottawa yesterday and the remains were escorted to the train by an escort of Royal Canadian Air Force officers and men.

Week-End Holiday Toll 9 Dead, 43 Injured

Six were killed in accidents through the province, 43 injured, and nine sudden deaths occurred in Toronto alone, a check-up of Ontario's 24th of May showed.

In Eastern and Western Ontario four motor traffic fatalities, one drowning and one electrocution were reported.

Near Brockville a boy of five and an adult pedestrian were killed by cars on the highway. Two motorists were fatally injured near Peterboro when their car went into the ditch, while William Henderson of Chatham was instantly killed when his car was struck by a train. Three others escaped death in level-crossing accidents.

Only one drowning was reported in the province; a nine year old boy at Windsor.

Aside from fire cracker accidents which sent four Toronto children to the hospital, all of them seriously injured and one likely to be crippled for life, a long list of Torontonians are registered at hospitals, victims of the holiday traffic.

Among them are Mr. and Mrs. T. P. Keast, bride and groom of a few days ago, who were injured near Philadelphia in a highway collision.

In addition to this list of injured, a hiking party of girls was brought to a sad end at Scarboro bluffs when one of their number, Agnes McBride, aged 13, of East York, was hurled 25 feet from the cliff to the lake below. Escaping death, she lies in a serious condition in the Hospital for Sick Children.

How to Make Artificial Increases in Bees

Experimental Farms Note.

The bees' way of making increase is to first increase the strength of the colony through thte production of young bees and then to divide the force of the colony by swarming. This method is not at all satisfactory to the modern beekeeper because it usually occurs just prior to or during the main honey flow and as the swarm that leaves the hive consists of practically the entire working force of the colony the prospect of a crop from the colony that swarms is shattered. Furthermore, there is also the danger of the swarm absconding for parts unknown, thus adding to the loss of the beekeeper. Natural swarming can be prevented and increase made without the loss of bees or honey. In Eastern Canada and British Columbia it is not wise to make an increase of bees before the main honey flow has well started except in localities where the main honey flow comes late in the season or where increase is of first importance. In the Prairie Provinces where the main flow comes during July and August it is quite safe to divide strong colonies prior to the flow. Where a maximum crop of honey is desired, only one increase should be made from each colony, to make more will be at the expense of the crop. To make increase in localities where the main flow comes early, remove from the colony two or three frames of emerging brood with the adhering bees and place them in a new hive on a new stand and introduce to the new hive a laying queen. Do this during the first week of the main honey flow. The field bees will return to the parent colony while new one will build up in time for the winter. When the flow is late and strong colonies are divided early make the division more equal.

For other methods of making artificial increase consult Bulletin No. 33 of the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa.

A near-sighted man lost his hat in a strong wind. He gave chase. A woman screamed from a nearby farmhouse.

"What are you doing there?"

"Getting my hat," he replied.

"Your hat," exclaimed the woman, "that's our little black hen you're chasing."

Winchester Home Bereaved

A young, bright life was ended on Friday last at noon when Lowell, the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Wright, of Winchester, who was only seven years old, passed away.

The little fellow had not been well for the past few months and had been in the Civic Hospital, Ottawa, as well as in the Water Street Hospital there, for treatment, but all was of no avail.

Less than three years ago Mr. and Mrs. Wright lost their two daughters, one in July and the other in November, so the sympathy of the community goes out to them in this great sorrow. A short funeral service was held in the home on Sunday at noon, after which the cortege proceeded to their former home near Smiths Falls, where interment was made. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. H. L. Morrison, of Ottawa, who was supplying for Rev. J. A. Waddell, who was away in Kingston.

A Merry-Go-Round.

A Deputy sheriff was sent to take an inventory of the property in a house. When he did not return for three hours, the sheriff went after him and found him asleep on a lounge in the living room. He had made a brave effort with his inventory, however. He had written down: "Living-room—1 table, 1 sideboard, 1 full bottle whisky." Then the "full" had been crossed out and "half full" substituted. Then this was overlined, and "empty" put in its place.

At the bottom of the page, in wobbly writing, was written: "1 revolving carpet."

Joseph E. Stubbs, Morrisburg

Mr. Joseph E. Stubbs, Civil War veteran, dealer in monuments and much respected citizen, passed away last Thursday evening in his 84 year, exactly twenty-three days after his 83rd birthday, at his late home there. Having come to Morrisburg only four years ago, Mr. Stubbs became the friend of everyone in a very short time.

Born in St. Lawrence County. New York State, on April 25th, 1847, he was a member of a family of 14. His father was Joseph Stubbs, from Ireland originally, and his mother was the former Miss Sarah Keenan. Mr. Stubbs, received his early education in New York state and, in 1863, on September 16th, he married Sarah McPherson. Shortly after that, in 1875, they came to Farran's Point where Mr. Stubbs entered the butchering business. But in 1876 he founded the monument business now carried on by his son, Charles, in Morrisburg and Farrans Point. Four years ago the couple came to Morrisburg where Mr. Stubbs lived until his death.

He served two years and three months in the Civil War (U.S.A.) of 1861-65, running away from home at the age of sixteen to enlist. Efforts were made by his father to get him out of the army, but in vain. He servin the 14th New York Heavy Artillery.

Besides his wife, he has one brother living, William Stubbs, Nelson, B.C., also surviving him are one son, Chas., of Morrisburg, and three daughters, Mrs. A. A. Johnston, of Farrans Point; Mrs. R. C. McGee, of Massena, N.Y., and Mrs. P. B. McDonald, of Toronto, and grand-children and four great-grandchildren.

The very large funeral was held Sunday at two p.m. from his former residence on Victoria street, and burial took place in Woodlawn cemetery. The funeral was under the auspices of Zeta Lodge, A. F. & A. M., No. 256 of Aultsville, and officiated at by Rev. Jenkins Burkholder. of the Knox Presbyterian church of Morrisburg.

A large attendance and large quantities of beautiful flowers made the ceremony very impressive. Friends were present from Ottawa, Ogdensburg, Toronto, Finch, Cornwall, Farrans Point, Aultsville and other centres besides the townspeople of Morrisburg who were there.

Mr. Stubbs' familiar figure will be missed by many in Morrisburg, not to mention the friends he made in the surrounding country while in the monument business.

Annual Agricultural Statistics

Ottawa.—It is the custom of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics to co-operate wth the nine provinces in taking a Dominion-wide census of important agricultural facts in June of each year.

The census takes the form of a simple cardboard schedule distributed to individual farmers through the medium of the rural school teachers and pupils in seven provinces, and in Ontario and British Columbia through the rural post offices. The essential object is to reach the farmer and to encourage as many as possible to fill in and return the schedule.

The two main phases of farm production—the areas of field crops and the numbers of live stock—are covered by the form. The areas of field crops determined from the schedules are combined later in the season with the estimated average yields per acre to determine the total yield of the country. In the case of wheat, particularly, the importance of having correct estimates of acreage is thus made apparent. Although there are many estimates of anticipated production, most of these are based on the one official acreage estimate, which has been issued annually since 1917 by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

It is unnecessary to emphasize the value of a wide sample to the attainment of accurate statistics, and it is hoped to obtain a complete schedule from the great majority of Canadian farmers. The more numerous the returns received the more reliable will be the estimates compiled from them. Much of Canadian economic enterprise depends to some extent on correct estimates of agricultural production in the making of their plans. With these facts in mind, it is impressed upon the farmers the importance of these schedules.

If any farmer does not receive the cardboard schedule by the middle of June, he should apply to the school teacher of the nearest rural school to his provincial Department of Agriculture, or to the Dominion Statistician at Ottawa. Letters addressed to the Dominion Statitician require no postage.

Propose Elimination Of Auto Speed Limits

Proposals to eliminate all speed limits for motor traffic on public highways will be made by five delegates from Toronto at the National Conference on State Highway Safety which is being opened by President Hoover in Washington.

W. G. Robertson, manager of the Ontario Motor League; Inspector Greenwood, in charge of Toronto traffic police; J. F. H. Wise, manager of the Ontario Safety League; S. L. Squire, secretary of the Good Roads Association, and J. P. Bickell, registrar of motor vehicles of Ontario, left Toronto for Washington.

There is an increasing consciousness that appropriate speed may reasonably and logically vary according to conditions, a report of the Toronto sub-committee will point out to the conference. "It is increasingly apparent," states the report, "that it is impracticable to declare by law that a speed stated in miles per hour shall at all times be legal and that any speed in excess of such arbitrary limits shall be illegal.

"There has been an increasing tendency on the part of legislators," the report continues, "to abandon definite speed limits expressed in miles per hour. Such maximum limits as have been enacted have been widely disregarded because unsuited to actual conditions which might exist."

Queen Victoria And a Norfolk Farmer.

Mr. Smith, of Dickleborough, in the County of Norfolk, was a simple-minded, earnest Christian, who had lived through those glorious times for the British farmer when Napoleon I. turned all Europe into one vast battlefield, and wheat was selling at 15s to 20s. a bushel. He was a genius too, in his way, and invented a plough which was a great improvement on the Ambrows implement then in common use.

His invention came under the notice of Prince Albert, who took great interest in agriculture, and he sent for him to explain certain matters connected with his plough. The old farmer accordingly journeyed to Windsor; no light undertaking in those days when the railway had not altogether supplemented the post chaise, the stage coach and the carrier's cart. He reached Windsor in the twilight of a summers evening and presented himself at the Castle. A gentleman of the household came to him and told him to present himself at ten o'clock on the following morning.

"Yes, that's all right," said the farmer, "but what am I to do for a bed?"

"A bed?" said the Colonel, "Oh! You had better go to an inn." He mentioned one where he would be made comfortable for the night, but Mr Smith did not take very kindly to the suggestion.

"Well, there now, Colonel," he said, "that dew seem mighty quare, that really dew. 'Go to an inn,' that's very ill convenient and costyle. I didn't come because I wanted to come; I had to come and the laste you can dew is to give me a bed. If you was to come to Dickleborough, my missis, she'd find you a bed, I know right well she would, specially if we'd axed you to come, and if you was as hungry as I be, I warrant she'd find you a supper to eat in the bargain." Old Smith said this in his pleasant way and the Colonel was taken by storm. He brought him up to his own rooms, had a good supper put before him and gave orders for his accommodation for the night. The two spent a very pleasant evening together, then the Colonel, he said—"I'll ring for your candle, Mr. Smith, and the man, he will show you to your room."

Prayers Before Bed.

"Thank ye, Connell," I said, "but there is one thing I allus do afore I go to bed, I have family prayer, I know my missis is having it at Dickleborough, and it won't do for her master not to have it because he happens to be away from home. Wile you let's have your Bible, if you please." The Colonel, he say, "Certainly, Mr. Smith," and he put it on the table and I say to him, "Well, now, will you rade and I pray or shall I rade and you pray?" he made answer and say, "I think I'd better do the rading, Mr. Smith," so he read a Psalm, he did, a beautiful Psalm that was too, but that was one of the shortest in the book and arter he'd done we knelt down and axed the Lord to bless him and the Queen and the Prince of Wales and the dear babes. He took the candle from the man, and he showed me to my bedroom his own self and a rare good grip he gave my hand when he said good-night at the door.

"Well, in the morning, I had a rare good breakfast and at ten o'clock I was took to see the Prince. He shook hands with me, quite friendly and he got to talking about my plough, and I showed him how it worked. Arter we'd bin talkin' for a bit, the door opened and a big man, with his head powdered and a uniform on, he say, "Her Majesty," in a loud voice, and in came the Queen. When I saw her come in I was right stammed (astonished), I thout she'd have had a goold chownd on her head and a goold sceptre in her hand and her gownd all a-trailin' ahind, same as we see in the pictors. But there she was, just a plain simple woman, with a kind look on her face. She spoke to me quite friendly like, and said she was very glad to see me, and what a long way I had come to shew them my plough. She hadn't spoke them words afore I was not more afraid of her than I am of my neighbour's wives—and not half so much as I am of some of 'em. She was just as simple and kind as if she warn't no more nor nobody, there warn't no mucky pride about her, but when I spake to her, I let her see I knowed who she was, and that I respects her. She saw right well she did, that John Smith, of Dickleborough, warn't no man to take no liberty, because she was kind to him. Well, we had a right pleasant talk arter we'd done with the plough. The Queen axed me a lot of questions about the farmers in our parts and the poor folk, and what wages they got, were their cottages comfortable? Did they go to church reglar? and all manner o' that. I told her the best I could. By and by, I began to get a bit on-easy—Smith boy, I say to myself, you're browt afore kings and princes and you must testify! I said "I 'ool" and I looked to the Lord for an opening, and twarn't long afore it came.

Talk With the Queen.

The Queen, she says to me, "Mr. Smith," she says, "howiver did you come to think of this cliver invintion o' yourn?" Well, your Majesty, Mum, says I, I had that in my head a sight o' days afore it all came straight. I see what was wanted plain enough, but I couldn't make out how to get at it. I thowt and thowt and I better thowt, but that did not come right nohow, so at last I made it matter o' prayer, and one morning that came into my mind like a flash, just like you see in that there model. "Why, Mr. Smith," she say, "do you pray about your plough?" Well, there now your Majesty, Mum, says I, why shouldn't I? My Father in heaven, He knowed I was in trouble about that and shouldn't I go to Him and tell him? I mind o' the boy Tom—he's a fine big man now, keepin' company along o' my neighbour Stebben's darter he is, and a rare good gal I know she be. But when he was a tiny mite o' a boy, I bowt him a whip and rarely pleased he was with it. Well, he came to me one day cryin' as if his little heart had bruk—he'd bruk that little whip he had and he came to me with it. Well now, your Majesty Mum, that whip warn't nothing to me, but it was somethin' to see the tears a-runnin' down my boy's cheeks, so I took him on my knee and wiped his eyes with my handkerchief and I kissed him, I did, and comforted him. Now, don't cry Tom, my boy, says I, I'll mend that whip I 'ool, so that it will crack as loud as ever and I'll buy you a new one next market day. Well now your Majesty Mum, says I, don't you think our Father in Heaven, He care as much for me as I care for my boy, Tommy. My plough warn't of much consequence to Him, but I know right well my trouble was. Well, now, would you believe it when I'd said that, the Prince, he turned away and he blowed his nose with his pocket hannkercher, and the Queen, she had tears in her eyes and I see one o' 'em rolling down her cheek. "You're a good man, Mr Smith," she says, "I'm thankful I have such subjects as you"—them were her very words, I'm proud on 'em. I've told my son Tom he's never to forget 'em and he's to tache 'em to his children if so be as God gives him a family.

When the Queen say them words to me, I say to her, "I nain't got nothing good about me but what comes from God," and she say, "No more ain't none of us, Mr. Smith." The Prince, he joined in and we had a rare good talk, t'was all the world like a band meeting. Folks may say what they like, but it ain't no use o' them saying it to John Smith of Dickleborough—he know and he say to all the world, Queen Victoria is a right good, godly woman and Prince Albert, he's another—leastways well and you know what I mean.

It was getting well nigh on noon by this time and the Queen at last, she say to me, "Mr. Smith," she say, "you will find lunch prepared for you and the man who waits on you will take you over the castle if you wish; there are some fine paintings and other things you might like to see." Well now, your Majesty Mum, says I, I ain't much of a judge of pictures, there is one thing I should rarely like to see. "What is it, Mr. Smith?" she say. If I might see the dear babes. The Queen, she laughed and she looked right tickled and she say they was out a'walkin' in the Park and someone should go with me and shew me the way. So she bid me good-bye and so did the Prince and a man came and took me away.

Met Royal Children.

Mr. Smith was taken to the Park and there met the royal children. His conductor said something to the lady in charge of them, doubtless telling her of Her Majesty's command, and the good old man talked to the children in his kindly way for a few minutes: then he took off his wide-brimmed beaver hat and standing bare-head in the sunshine, he prayed that the blessing of God might be upon them and abide with them. Then he turned his face homeward and went back to the simple everyday life of a Norfolk farmer.

Not long after, he received a box which had been brought from London by the carrier, and in it he found a most beautiful family Bible with a note explaining that it was a present from the Queen and Prince Albert. Mr. Smith carefully packed it up again and returned it with a letter to the Queen asking her if she would be so good as to put her name to it. The Bible came back in due time with the autograph signature, not of Her Majesty only, but of the Prince also and of all the children, even the baby's little hand had been guided to write its name under the signature the Queen had written with her own hand —"A memento of a visit of a good man."

Mr. Smith had a large glass case made to cover the Bible and on certain days he used to shew it to sightseers at 3d a head—the money thus earned was dropped into a missionary box, together with the contributions of the family and when the annual missionary meeting came round the box and the story were always produced to the great satisfaction of the audience, who never grew tired of hearing the good old man tell the tale of his interview with the Queen.

Hard on Father.

"Mother," said little Bobby, "what does father go downtown for every day?"

"Why, he goes downtown to work and get money so Bobby can have a good dinner every day," his mother replied.

A few days later, when Bobby sat down to dinner, he viewed the table with a critical eye. Seeing none of his favorite dishes, hed isdainfully shrugged his small shoulders and grunted:

"Huh! Father didn't do so much to-day, did he?".

Health Service

IT'S MY STOMACH

Food plays an important part in the securing and maintaining of health. We are told that we should eat to live and not live to eat, which is one way of saying that we should not eat to excess. In addition to avoiding excess, it should be taken into consideration that the body demands a well-balanced diet which should include milk and milk products, fresh, green vegetables and fruits.

Proper food and proper digestion are of an importance that cannot be overemphasized. The stomach does its work day after day and does not very often fail to do so. It stands a fair amount of abuse without protest, and, as long as it does its work without attracting attention, we do not give much thought to this important organ.

Pain or discomfort in any part of the abdomen is apt to be blamed on the stomach, which is then said to be upset. Very often, the last thing eaten is thought to have disagreed with the stomach.

When there is dicomfort or pain in the region of the stomach, there is something wrong, but it certainly does not mean that the stomach is necessarily responsible. Abnormal and diseased conditions of the stomach do occur, but most of the distress blamed on that organ is not caused primarily by the stomach.

Worry, nervous strain, and anxiety are real causes of pain occurring in the upper part of the abdomen. The business man who works under tension, who hurries through his lunch, and who does not take time to relax, may expect to have an upset stomach.

The onset of many of the acute diseases is accompanied by loss of anpetite, nausea, and sometimes vomiting. In such cases, the stomach is affected by a general disease of the whole body.

Heart disease may mean that the supply of blood to the stomach is not sufficient to allow the stomach to do its work properly. As a result, it is difficult for the organ to digest foods which require a considerable time in the process. Under such circumstances, the use of foods which are difficult to digest may be followed by distress, but the heart, and not the stomach, is really to blame.

When the stomach goes on the rampage, we should not think so much of the last thing eaten as being the cause, but rather consider this as a symptom of some conditions which requires attention.

The stomach should not be abused. It is not to be expected that foods and beverages can be used indiscriminately without causing trouble in the organ which is overburdened as a result of such carelessness.

Rust

One of the greatest enemies of progress is rust. For years the iron and steel industries have spent hundreds of thousands a year in reearch into means of preventing the rust that destroys bridges, factories, machinery, everything made of iron. Protecting metals against rust is an expensive part of all kinds of construction and manufacturing processes. So called "stainless" steel is providing one answer. Intead of protecting the surface, certain other metals are alloyed with the steel and the metal becomes rustless, capable of taking a brilliant polish. Cheaper than nickel plate, more durable than chronium plate, one automobile manufacturer is now turning out cars whose bright parts are of stainless steel, and now other makers are considereding entire bodies and chassis of the same metal. If this works out our roads may become as glittering as they were when everybody rode nickel-plated bicycles.

OUR TROUBLESOME GUEST

In 1882 when my brother Frank and I were boys in what was then Dakota Territory we had an experience we should not care to repeat. One day in March we were restless, for we could not think of anything to do, and, since the houses at that time were small and the two of us penned up in one room with the rest of the family made things somewhat uncomfortable, mother proposed that we go outdoors to play Indian.

That pleased us. Playing Indian was one of our favorite pastimes, for our parents were uneasy over a treatened uprising by Sailing Goose, a chief whose band was in winter quarters a few miles north of us, and we heard much talk about the redskins.

The day, though bright, was chilly, and so before going out we put on our coats and overshoes and muffled our ears. Playing Indian was great fun, but when you have only a house, a barn, a haystack and a straw stack set in a treeless plain that meets the sky in a level line on every side the opportunities for surprises, ambushes and all that sort of thing are few. Soon we had exhausted all our strategy and met for a treaty.

We smoked an imaginary pipe of peace, had a war dance with plenty of whoops and pantomimes of scalpings and then suddenly an idea came to Frank.

"Lets see if our hole up through the straw stack is all right," he said.

Late the fall before, we had found a hole that Shep the sheep dog, had dug in the centre of the stack for his winter quarters at night. We had enlarged it and had tunnelled upward to the top. We had thrust a light ladder down to make easy climbing and had used the stack for coasting until the cattle, by eating and digging around it, had made it look not unlike a giant mushroom and had spoiled the sliding.

We found some snow in the hole, but by digging it away and removing a little straw that had fallen in we were soon able to reach the top, where we stood rejoicing in the view. The prospect consisted merely of a bare, snowy, wind-swept plain with a claim shanty or two scattered here and there, but we thought it grand.

Father had sold the cattle the day before; so none were in the way, and we jumped off the stack and climbed back up the ladder in the hole until we were tired. Finally we lay down in a depression on the top to build air castles. That was our favorite pastime, and the stack was a good place for it; from where we lay we could see only the white wind-driven clouds floating overhead. Life on the prairies in those days was monotonous,—every week was like the one before it,—but we possessed the happy faculty of inventing wonderful adventures to pass away the dragging hours. That day I remember I was revelling in crocodile hunting in the Southern states, and Frank was probably catching sharks in the South Seas.

We must have lain there nearly an hour, sheltered from the wind, when the fount of our imagination ran dry and we felt a little chilly. Frank jumped up with a yell and turned a summersault off the edge of the stack. He had intended landing in the deep bed of chaff that the cattle had dug out and trampled under foot, but instead he landed on the hind quarters of a huge, shaggy brown beast that was eating just beneath us!

The animal whirled with a hoarse screaming bawl, and to his dismay Frank saw that it was a big bull buffalo! Right then was Frank's opportunity to display the marvellous strength that was his in the air castles that he had just built. By rights he should have taken that buffalo by the tail and dashed him to pieces on the ground. Instead he sprang to his feet and showed all the speed he was capable of in getting around the stack. The buffalo, which was extremely quick for so large an animal, followed instantly, and Frank, seeing that he should be overtaken before he could reach the house, dove like a rabbit for the hole leading up to the top of the stack.

Hearing the noise below, I slid down over the edge to see what was the trouble. When I reached the ground nothing was in sight, but in an instant the brute came on round the straw pile looking for Frank and saw me! I was a good runner in those days, but I certainly needed all the speed I had to keep ahead of those wicked black horns. Circling the straw stack, I made for the sheltering hole scarcely five seconds behind Frank; I was even quicker in reaching the top.

"It's a buffalo!" was all Frank could say. "He's as big as a house!"

I could not talk at all and trembled so that I could hardly sit up.

We fancied that we were safe and was wondering whether the brute would go away or stay and attack the first person who came out of the house when we heard the screaming bellow again, and the top-heavy stack shook as if it were about to fall. The animal had seen us both disappear in the hole and was charging the straw stack in an effort to dig us out.

The old straw pile presented a weak barrier to his huge bulk and mighty strength; our refuge was soon shaking so badly that we could hardly keep from falling off. We thought of sliding off on the other side and running for safety, and just then we saw father standing in the door of the barn and looking at us.

We shouted as loud as we could, but we were both talking at once, and he could not understand; at first he seemed to think we had invented a new game. The buffalo, being on the opposite side of the straw stack, was out of father's sight, but suddenly the pile shook violently, and at that father ran toward us. Seeing his peril we had sense enough to talk one at a time and quickly told him what was the matter. He shouted to us to stay where we were and, turning, made for the house to get his rifle.

When he came out Shep was with him. Warily circling the straw stack, father tried to get a shot at the buffalo, but in a few moments over it went, and we were thrown far out on the frozen ploughed ground. The buffalo was completely covered with the fine wheat straw and chaff, but he was not far below the surface.

Frank and I leaped to our feet and ran for the house, getting behind father just as the savage hairy head, with its wicked black horns, emerged covered with chaff. As the buffalo climbed over the straw pile father dropped to one knee, took a steady sight at the head and fired. The beast fell to his knees, and we all thought he was dead. We ran excitedly forward, but the bull suddenly regained his feet, shook his head dazedly and then charged.

Frank and I ran to the barn near by. Father tried another shot but missed and in springing to one side to dodge the charging beast slipped on a patch of ice and fell. At that moment, Shep, who had been dancing round, saw his opportunity and, dashing in, got a firm hold on the creature's tail. He had been repeatedly punished for seizing cattle in that way, but he knew that this situation was unusual and acted accordingly.

The buffalo tried to kick his new antagonist. But Shep had had bitter experience of that form of attack with cattle, and keeping a firm hold on the bffalo's tail all the time, he either swerved to one side or leaped high into the air whenever the deadly foot left the ground.

Father scrambled to his feet and circled the struggling pair, striving to get a good shot without killing the dog; but the buffalo was whirling so rapidly that it was a difficult thing to take safe aim.

Shep was off the ground most of the time and had been kicked frequently when the plunging animal approached the wire fence that had been put up to keep the cattle away from the haystack. The next turn they made Shep's body hit the corner post with a thud, and he fell gasping to the ground.

That was too much for Frank and me! Without stopping to think of the consequences, we dashed out of the barn and into the wired-off enclosure round the haystack planning to reach through the fence and drag our beloved dog to safety.

The buffalo saw us, however, and, blaring defiance, left father and the dog and charged the fence. It went down like so much string, but some of the wires snarled round the bull's legs and held him for a moment. The delay gave us time to run into the barn again. Father fired two or three shots before the buffalo turned the corner of the barn, but he missed.

We were inside, looking out of the small window at the end, when the buffalo passed, still dragging some of the barbed wire from the fence. The pain of the barbs and the shot in the head had driven him wild, and he charged the wagon with the hayrack on it. In a moment he had tipped it over! Then he began to gore it, but he snarled some of the wires round the splintered rack, stepped through one of the wheels and fell. He struggled mightily, but failed to rise.

After the bull had thrashed round vainly for some minutes while father watched with the rifle, ready to fire at close range and end his misery, we realized that he was hopelessly entangled. Frank was the first to notice that the buffalo had a halter on. We did not believe it at once, but we were soon able to see that it was indeed a halter with a short frayed rope hanging from the matted hair under his chin. Father, who had worked on cattle ranches in Montana before taking up the claim in Dakota, quickly brought a rope, and before we could plan how the job should be done he had "hog-tied" the brute securely and was nipping off the barbed wire where it was cutting into his flesh.

Then we began to speculate where the bull had come from and how the halter happened to be on his head. What should we do with him? Father's rifle ball had struck him at the base of the horn, making a bloody though not serious wound. He rolled round on the ground, horning and bawling savagely and glaring at us with his wicked round eyes until father threw a blanket over his head. At that he lay quiet.

After seeing the halter father thought it best not to kill the buffalo. He hitched the team to the brute's horns and dragged him into the wagon shed, which he boarded up to keep him from freezing.

Three days later an agent from the Canadian government came to our place, looking for one of a herd of buffalo that had strayed away from an experimental farm in Manitoba. He said that the buffalo was the ugliest and most vicious bull in the herd of more than three hundred, and that he had broken away twice before. When he and his men left with our troublesome guest they paid father one hundred dollars, the reward that their government had advertised for the capture of the animal, and we bade them a cordial good-bye.

When Shep recovered from the broken ribs and other minor injuries that he had suffered in the battle, he was the proud owner of the finest collar that we could find, and we had never to whip him again for catching the cattle bythe tail. He was completely cured.

News and Information For the Busy Farmer

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Reports received from practically all corn-growing districts convey expectation of increased planting. Essex and Kent will have more corn and more than average attention is being given the crop in Elgin, Norfolk and Bruce.

The agricultural representative in Lambton county reports that fertilizers are coming into more general use there each year. Vegetable growers are using quantities of mixed fertilizers and farmers are using commercial materials on fall wheat, sugar beets, and some corn fields. An especial increase is noted in the use of unmixed nitrate, potash and phosphate.

Clovers, which make up the most valuable part of our hay crops, require sweet soil. The Reactosoil, prepared by the O. A. C., a simple and accurate test, quickly tells whether or not the soil requires sweetening. A kit containing enough material to test about 100 samples can be obtained directly from the college or from your county agricultural representative.

On an attempt to meet the demand of sugar beet growers in the southwest counties for information on the kind and quality of commercial fertilizer to increase the yield and improve the quality of sugar beets, the O. A. C. Department of Chemistry is conducting a series of tests in cooperation with the agricultural representatives, J. A. Garner and S. B. Strothers, and representative growers of Kent and Essex counties.

Weed Situation Serious.

In a recent conference of weed inspectors, A. R. G. Smith, of New Hamburg, District Weed Inspector of Western Ontario, declared: "We are slow to comprehend the serious situation that confronts us. It is necessary that we have the hearty cooperation of the press and public opinion to assist in reducing the possibility of a greater spread of weeds, especially those designated 'noxious' and under the ban of the Ontario Weed Control Act. Weeds are going to beat us if we do not awaken to the seriousness of the situation. For instance, the perennial sow thistle is now in every county of Ontario." All inspectors are asked to make their position definable as "weed advisors" instead of "inspectors' 'in thte orinary sense of the word.

Alsike and Clover Seed.

This year alsike and sweet clover are very moderate in price and both will produce an abundance of late pasture or may cut as hay. The alsike can be mixed with timothy and it, like the sweet clover, can be sown any time during May and June. Alfalfa also will supply a lot of feed if sown alone any time during these two months. Furthermore, any of the crops mentioned here can be left over the winter and they will give a good crop the next season.

Heavy Winter Killing.

Of the 670,000 acres of winter wheat sown in Ontario last fall, only 509,000 acres will be harvested, according to an official estimate. The difference of 161.000 acres represents the amount winter-killed. The percentage is 24, as compared with 5 per cent in 1929 and 9 per cent the average for the ten years 1920-1929. Ontario also lost 16 per cent of its hay and clover crop by winter-killing, as compared with 5 per cent last year.

Tobacco Acreage Grows.

Approximately 15,000 acres of fluecured tobacco will be under cultivation in Norfolk county this year, according to an official computation by J. K. Perrett, departmental field man. This compares with 10,000 acres in 1929 and 5,000 acres in 1928. The warm weather in early May brought the plants on rapidly and planting started the middle of the month, continuing through the past two weeks. The Imperial Tobacco Company is completing the erection of a new half-million dollar drying and grading plant at Delhi, the centre of the district.

Soy Bean Tested.

The Department of Field Hubsandry of the O A. C. is planning to have four plots of two acre extent for the demonstration of soy bean growing in Kent county this year and will use two varieties to determine the most practical type. It is stated that a number of the mills in Ontario are willing to purchase soy beans from farmers for the purpose of extracting the oil from the product and for the manufacture of meal. Soy bean growing has not been very extensive during the past years owing to the inability of finding a market for the produce. With the purchase of beans for manufacture the production of this crop is expected to gain in popularity.

Turkeys Found Profitable.

Turkey breeding is not the difficult undertaking that is generally supposed when the breeding stock and poults are properly handled. Essentials to success in turkey breeding, are: clean soil, mature stock for breeding, free range, and, above all, the keeping of the turkey flock away

Women In Seclusion Holidaying From Life

Denver. — Revolting against the conventions and routine of everyday life 11 Denver women, 9 of them married, to-day were in seclusion in the country home of Mrs. Henry Swan.

The women departed from their homes, leaving children and husbands behind and forbidding communication of any kind with the Swan home. Husbands repaired to clubs and children went into the custody of nurses.

The women jointly expressed a determination to "get away from it all" for a relief from the whole business routine living. They were a little ed, they said, of bridge games interrupted by a clock and prepare for ner. They also were a little weary luncheons and parties.

The women said they had performthese duties faithfully and well that they, like their men folk om they are forsaking for a week, in need of a vacation.

A program for each day of the ek has been outlined, a spokesman the group said, but other than facts that it scheduled rope-skipg for morning and bridge to their arts' content for afternoon, and ssibly evening, there was no defininformation as to the activities of women.

Charlie Chaplin said at a supper rty in New York:

"I didn't always make a million a nute. I remember a season when was prompter in an English proacial theatre for 15 shillings a week. 'I worked harder than I do now, . In addition to keeping the actors their lines, I had to make all the side noises.

'I thundered, I galloped like a se, I sang like a woman, I marched e an army, I howled like a drinkddened mob, and I screeched like ocomotive—all for 15 shillings a k.

I remember one night when it med that the last straw had been ped on me.

I was letting off female shrieks of ror and thundering with one hand hailing with the other, while my t leg was working with the moan he wind, and the left was imitatthe crash of falling trees, when leading man stuck has head round at me from the stage.

"He was supposed to be pursued by dogs, and he hissed:

" 'Bark, you chump! Why don't you bark, you lazy shirker?' "

Softball at Finch

Nine members of the Finch town league met their first outside opposition last night when they played the Courtauld's softball team of Cornwall, representatives of that city league. The visitors were victorious by the score of 18 to 10 of the six innings played, the Courtaulds took a good lead in the first three, as the locals did not get the breaks of the game. However, for the balance of the game the locals found themselves in place and rain in a number of runs which made the score more even. This gave the local supporters something to cheer about as there was a large attendance. The next exhibition game is slated for June 3, when the Vankleek Hill boys appear against the locals at the park. The line-ups:

Finch—Preston, Hoople, Rombough, Ross, Jack, Droppo, Brownlee, McQuitty, McDougall.

Cornwall—H. Campbell, A. Campbell, Cuddon, Goulet, Brand, Currier, Maloney, Reilly, Jodouin.

A disappointing thing about our neighbour's children is the fact that they never turn out as bad as we expect.
