Research leads to facelift for physician's residence

MORRISBURG — A summer's worth of research has led not only to a new look for Upper Canada Village's physician's house, but a new identity for the village physician as well.

Researcher Robert Moreau, a student studying to finish a Master's degree, spent much of last summer researching medicine in Upper Canada in the 1860's. The research, part of Moreau's internship in museum sciences, revealed that much of what was said about the village's ''doctor'' needed to be changed.

Handicapped from the start — none of Upper Canada's medical men were diaryists in the mold of McKenzie King — Moreau decided to look at old account books, which registered a physician's calls, his prescribed treatments and the fees charged

Moreau continued his search in true historical detective fashion. He looked through the village's archives first, but found little information. His next excursion was to Ottawa to the National Archives with similar results.

Further afield, he tried the Ontario archives in Toronto, where he discovered documents published by the Hannah Institute, a group that funds medical research. The book, says Moreau, was ''a great find.'' It listed sources of information on Ontario's medical history.

Moreau discovered that the practises of a physician in the 1860's would probably horrify a modern patient. Blood-letting, blistering and the use of mercury as ''medicine'' were commonplace.

By the 1860's, the historical period portrayed at the village, many graduates of Ontario's first medical schools were practising in Upper Canada. In the 1860's, there were about 687 practitioners in Ontario, with only 67 in Eastern Upper Canada.

Before the mid-1800's, most medical students learned their skills through apprenticeships. A medical student could be indentured to a physician for up to seven years. With medical schools came lectures on chemistry, anatomy and the principles of medicine, and an internship at a hospital.

As applications to medical schools grew, requirements for admittance toughened. In 1866, knowledge of Greek became compulsory, keeping women and students from lower-class families out of medical schools.

Moreau says his research has given the village a clearer picture of the typical medical man in Upper Canada. Up until last year, the village practitioner, a man called Dr. John Keogh was called the village ''doctor.''

The title of ''doctor'' was one of the first things Moreau's research put to rest. In the mid-nineteenth century, medical practitioners were called ''physicians.''

But Moreau's research led him to believe that Dr. John Keogh, whose village character was based on a real physician working in Prince Edward County in the 1840's, was not a typical doctor. Dr. Keogh's 1840's time frame was out-of-date with the rest of the village, so Moreau created a new physician based on tidbits of information about Upper Canada's medical men.

The house called the ''doctor's house'' at the village has never actually been the home of a physician. The house was originally built by Michael Cook, the son of an Aultsville tavern keeper and Canada's first Holstein breeder. The house was rescued when the land it stood upon was flooded with the Seaway.

While the village's new practitioner will remain nameless, and faceless, Moreau has created a new persona. The new physician is a composite of a typical physician of the time. The new physician will be in his mid-30's, a graduate of Queen's University, married with young children.

The updating at the physician's house reflects the new persona. Furnishings have been simplified to reflect the life of a younger, less affluent family, and the old waiting room has been turned into a study because Moreau's findings revealed that most patients were treated in their homes.

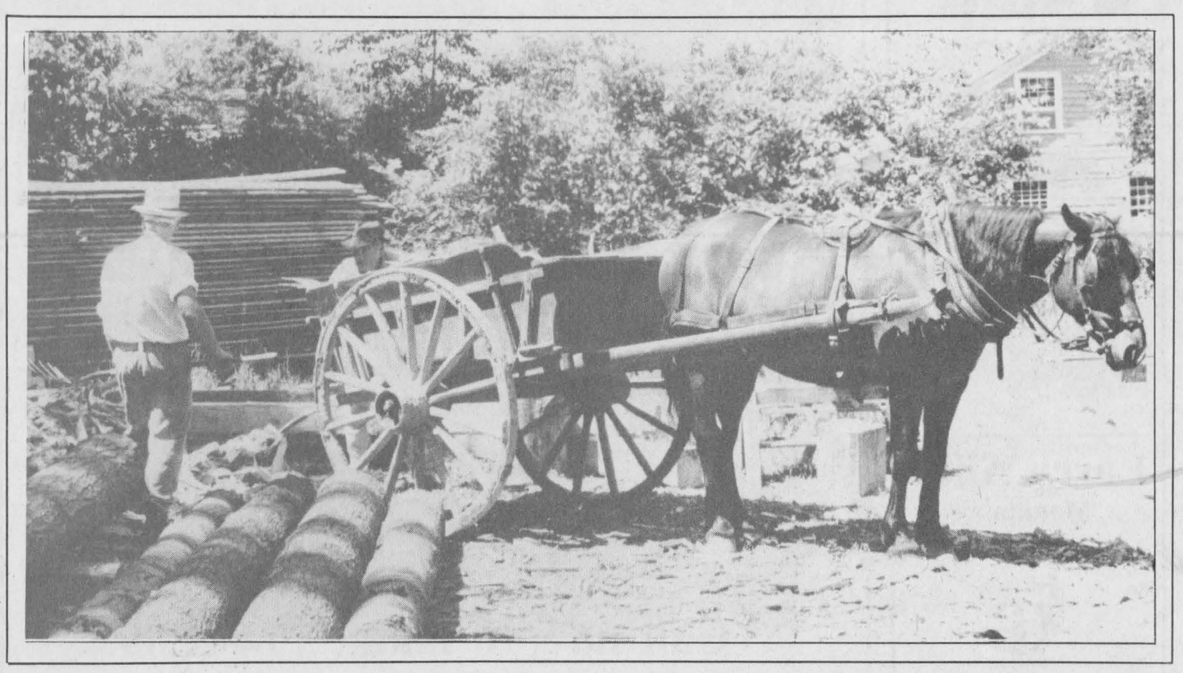
Except for emergencies, patients usually stayed away from the physician's house, unless they had to pick up medicine or pay a bill, an activity that most folk in Upper Canada Village preferred to avoid.

While the physician was a relatively well-to-do person in the community, billing his patients for about $2,900 per year, he could only collect about $1,700 in cash.

About 10 per cent of the bills were paid in goods and services, such as wood, boots and fence repair. Many patients never got around to paying their bills for years, or had to be sued for payment. If the patient died, the bill had to be written off.

Billing depended not only on the treatment, but also on the ''class'' of the patient. The physician retained two fee schedules, one for the ''highest class'' and another for the ''lowest class.''

A semi-skilled worker, such as a carpenter or a tinsmith, had to work half a day to pay for a physician's visit to his home, a charge of about 50 cents. It took most of a worker's weekly salary to pay for the medical bill for setting a broken bone or delivering a baby.



Life in Upper Canada harsh, short

Medicine in 1860s made cures hazardous to health

MORRISBURG — If the patient didn't die of the disease, he was sure to die of the cure.

Life in Upper Canada was often nasty, brutish and short, and the medical practises of the time didn't make life any easier, says researcher Robert Moreau. The average lifespan for a woman in the 1860's was 43 years, and the average man lived to be a venerable 39.

Fevers, colds and influenza were among the more common ailments treatment by a country physician in Upper Canada. But, unlike a modern doctor, the pioneer physician had to work without penicillin, antiseptics or even knowing about germs and other microscopic creatures.

The age of science was beyond the horizon for most practitioners in Upper Canada. Anesthetics, antiseptics and the use of the microscope helped to open doors, but most patients wanted to be treated in the old-fashioned way. This meant being bled for illnesses, blistered to draw poisons out of the body and prescribed opium and mercury for what ailed you.

While on the wane, ''heroic medicine'' was still practised in Upper Canada in the 1860's. The term ''heroic'' refers not to the physician's attempts to save the patient, but to the patient, who had to have a ''heroic'' constitution to survive.

Drawing on accepted medical practises reaching back as far as ancient Greece, physicians believed that the body was composed of four ''humors'', blood, phlegm, yellow bile and black bile, and an illness was an imbalance between the humors. The balance could be set straight by bleeding the patient.

Physicians used three ways to bleed patients — none of which involved sterilizing the instruments — and each held the possibility of infection.

A small knife, called a lancet, was often used to cut the skin. After the patient bled the prescribed amount, the wound was covered. A common prescription for blood-letting was to remove four ounces of blood four times a day, usually until the patient turned blue.

For more scientific practitioners, cupping was a new technology. The patient was scratched with a scarificator, an instrument with 12 small, sharp blades, leaving a mark like a cat scratch. A heated cup was placed over the cuts. As the cup cooled, the blood was drawn out of the cut with a syringe.

Leeches were used to draw blood from patients with fevers, influenza, malaria and cholera. Physicians could buy jars of leeches from the local pharmacy, and use them to draw blood.

Blistering was another common treatment for arthritis and fevers. The theory behind blistering said that poisons could be drawn from the body in blisters. A hot instrument caused the patient to blister on the back or stomach, which were then lanced.

Physicians believed that poisons in the body could be removed by purging. Opium, morphine and mercury were used to force poisons out of the organs.

Surgery, usually only practised in the case of a visible tumor or the need for amputation, was risky business. The discovery of ether and chloroform — usually sprinkled on a towel and put over the patient's nose — gave the physician more time, but did nothing to relieve the patient's screams.

If the patient survived the shock of the surgery, he was unlikely to survive infection. Antiseptics were discovered in 1867, but it was the 1880's before they were in common use in Upper Canada. For the physician in the 1869's, gangrene was a healthy part of the recovery process.

For the wealthier Upper Canadian, overeating could be a problem, and the physican came equipped with a stomach pump to relieve the distressed reveler.

The physician's methods didn't inspire confidence — a poor survival rate — didn't inspire confidence in all sectors of society. The physician — called an allopath — had to compete with advice columnists, midwives, patent medicine peddlars and ''irregular practitioners.''

The ''homeopath'' was one such irregular practitioner, who believed that small doses of drugs would force the body to get rid of poisons. Homeopaths had their own societies and pharmacies in Upper Canada, a system seen as a mark of legitimacy by the public.

The thomsonian believed that digestive imbalances caused diseases, and prescribed vegetable-based medicines to cure imbalance. Eclectic doctors were those who used a combination of allopathic, homeopathic and thomsonian medicine.

Advice columns were often the family's prime source of medical knowledge. Published in newspapers, these columns offered home remedies for common complaints. The cure for ''a nervous disease of the head,'' according to Mrs. Palmer, a nineteenth-century Ann Landers, was salt and ammonia dissolved in soft water and applied to the head.

While most ''heroic'' measures declined in popularity as scientific advancements made medical treatment safer, many patients still demanded blood-letting, blistering and purging. ''The people of that time resisted change,'' says Moreau. ''Patients expected purge and bleed treatments, and they trusted them.''

Master's student Robert Moreau holds up a ''cup'' considered to be a new-fangled device in the 1860s. The physician scratched the patient with a ''scarificator'', an instrument with 12 small, sharp blades, then placed the heated cup over the scratches.

Interpreters make history come alive

MORRISBURG — The women at Upper Canada Village's interpreter's session look like mothers, grandmothers, nurses, teachers and secretaries.

But by the end of the month, they will be transformed into nineteenth century women. Make-up will be scrubbed off, earrings are replaced with simple gold hoops, rings, except for simple wedding bands, are left at home, prescription wire-rimmed glasses will replace modern eyewear, and chic short haircuts will be hidden under frilly caps.

Upper Canada Village is an ''open air museum''. Unlike a regular museum, where visitors can look, but not touch, the village draws visitors in with the sights, sounds, tastes and smells of life as it was before Confederation.

''I came out with two friends, just for the ride,'' says one interpreter. After her friends had been interviewed, she was called into the office. Since then, she has spent 14 years as an interpreter.

She still can't put her finger on why she was chosen for the job. ''I guess I smiled a lot,'' she says. Being talkative and friendly brings top marks, too.

Interpreters are given research results to help carry out their jobs. It helps in the selection process, too, if the applicant knows an old-fashioned skill like spinning, weaving, scything, or plowing with horses.

''If you don't like talking, you shouldn't be here,'' says one interpreter. Talking is part of the interpreter's job. Visitors ask all kinds of questions about life in Upper Canada — some of them unanswerable — and have to be ready to field almost any question.

The village helps out with seminars every spring, discussing topics from landscape to entertainment in the 1860's. If an interpreter doesn't know the answer, he probably won't answer the question.

Agriculture not Liberal priority: Villeneuve

QUEEN'S PARK — Agriculture has taken a back seat in the Liberal budget, says Agriculture and Food critic Noble Villeneuve.

"Instead of increasing spending in every area and making the biggest tax grab in Ontario history, the province should have picked half a dozen priority areas for increased spending, held off increases, and not increased taxes or the total debt," he says.

Villeneuve puts Ontario's grain producers and grape growers pork producers on the endangered list, adding that Queen's Park will be making more on added tax to tobacco products than it will be spending on its entire agricultural budget.

"Unrestrained spending at double the inflation rate has characterized the Liberal administration, and while this continues, Ontario's stressed agricultural sector deserves substantial expenditure increases," he says.

While the provincial Liberals have increased the budget by 1.9 per cent, Villeneuve charges that the increases are not in step with the needs in the industry.

"If the government actually believes its study on free trade and agriculture, then at least $30 million in new programs is required to assist affected areas, particularly in the grape industry."

Villeneuve maintains that recent GATT decisions will be the death knell for Ontario's wine industry. He wants the Grits to take a two-pronged approach to solving the problem — a program to help vineyards adopt the French-type grapes that are demanded by the international market, and a program to help farmers who want to leave the industry transfer into another field.

"The province should have picked half-a-dozen priority areas."

A long-time advocate of processing surplus corn into ethanol, a clean-burning fuel alcohol, Villeneuve says Queen's Park isn't sending out signals to processors who are capable of producing ethanol, a product which has become a reality in Western Canada and the United States.

"We don't need research," he says, adding that Eastern Ontario's St. Lawrence Starch Company now has the ability to turn grains into ethanol.

"Here we stand, holier-than-thou, blaming the Americans for acid rain when gas emissions are a major polluter," he says. "Official support for ethanol gasoline production could take surplus corn and other grains off the market, and at the same time create thousands of jobs, decrease pollution and extend our oil reserves."

Grain prices are lower than they were 20 years ago, if inflation were taken into account, he says. "The province must also consider support industries for which develop new uses for crops."

Among these industries is a replacement for road salt, calcium-magnesium acetate. The product is only 10 per cent as corrosive as salt, but is just as effective. "as currently manufactured, it is too expensive," Villeneuve admits, "but if the acetic acid was derived from corn, costs would be made more attractive."

For most existing government programs, the problem is not more funding but getting assistance to producers "in a more prompt and effective manner."

Villenueve applauded the recently-instituted land stewardship program, but says the program has had "a shaky and confusing administrative start."

He pointed to the Farm Management, Safety and Repairs Program as another example. All of the grants were approved in the last fiscal year, but 60 per cent of the grants will not be mailed until the current fiscal year.

The funds for the program have been exhausted. Villeneuve says this should be an incentive to continue the program, but so far, the ministry has made no move.

The Cream Quality Assistance Program has also left the province's 1800 cream producers in the dark, according to Villeneuve. The program wrapped up this year, leaving $1 million in grants untouched.

The grants, earmarked to help farmers upgrade their facilities to comply with new regulations, didn't get to the farmers because they were simply unaware of the program's existence.

Eastern Ontario was given short shrift in the budget says Villeneuve, who is pushing for Queen's Park to offer SD&G a grant of about $14 million to channelize the South Nation River. "Eastern Ontario is left out of the budget," he says.

WSA screens Ethiopian video postcard

CRYSLER — Local farm women sent their counterparts in Ethiopia a video postcard of their families, farm life in Eastern Ontario and the changing seasons.

Last week, they screened the response: scenes of a semi-nomadic people who harvest grain by hand and move to the wetter lowlands each year to pasture their cattle.

Mingled with the scenes of North African farm family life are archival photographs of the mutilated corpses of men, women and children killed in 27-year-old war.

After a moment of silence, one stunned woman said quietly, "We think we got problems."

On Wednesday afternoon, about 30 members of the local chapter of Women for the Survival of Agriculture crowded into the living room of WSA president Dorothy Middleton to view the videotape from the village of Rora Bakla, a village in Eritrea on the Red Sea. The tape featured members of the National union of Eritrean Women.

The exchange, sponsored by Oxfam-Canada, is the brainchild of Susan Watkins, who researched a study of Eastern Ontario farm women's economic contribution to agriculture and then took a job with the development agency. She has worked in Eritrea, one of two provinces in Ethiopia hardest hit by famine.

The initial exchange of videotapes was originally to be the first of three, but the WSA is reconsidering its response.

The Eritrean women ended their postcard with a plea for a ceasefire in the war that's continued since 1961, when Ethiopia annexed Tigre and Eritrea. Watkins said most of the area is now under the control of the Eritrean People's Liberation Front and the government is trying to starve out opposition, cutting off delivery of emergency food aid from around the world.

Canada has been a leader in aid, ranking behind only the United States, the Soviet Union and the European Economic Community. But Watkins said the government has been reluctant to interfere in the political situation causing famine.

She said a popular campaign for peace— which would permit the import of food and allow development work to continue — could mean more to the Canadian government than a plea from Oxfam.

The WSA was eager to take up the challenge and listed its federal contacts: Monique Landry, minister for external relations and international development; Charlie Mayer, minister of state for grains and oilseeds; former Liberal minister of agriculture Eugene Whelan, and Glengarry-Prescott-Russell MP Don Boudria.

And because the Eritrean women are particularly interested in their lobbying tactics and networking, the WSA may send some translated copies of their newsletter detailing the history and growth of the organization.

Watkins countered any criticism that aid money that could be spent on food was instead going to videotape and cameras.

"You're their voice to the world," she said.

"They're capable and able of bringing about their own development but how long will it take...They'll succeed regardless. But how many people will die in the interim?"

The two groups of farm women, while thrilled by the contact, have found it hard to relate to each other's lives.

"They seemed to be looking at it like we lived on some kind of planet that is not related," said Watkins of the Eritrean women's response.

"It really struck them, the difference in the technology level. Although the similarities are there, I think it was harder for them to relate to farming in Canada because of the machinery."

Overcoming the cultural barriers could be even more difficult.

In the more traditional, predominantly Moslem areas, women are responsible for the backbreaking chores of maintaining a household, carrying huge jugs of water and bundles of firewood on their backs and grinding by hand the grain to feed the family.

"They still grind with a rock and, depending on the size of your family, it could take six hours a day," said Watkins.

Marriages are arranged before a girl reaches puberty and female circumcision is still practised, although it's been outlawed by the liberation movement. In some areas, women have no right to land or to initiate divorce.

But the area is in the midst of social transformation.

In 1984, villages began adopting laws that give women the right to choose their husbands and file for divorce. Women can sit on three-person judiciary councils that rule on village matters. They can own land under a system that grants property to all villagers — whether men, women or teenagers — when they become of age.

Thanks to an educational health care program, the mortality rate of women giving birth has dropped from 33 to 1.7 per cent. The illiteracy rate is also in decline and now stands at about 60 per cent.

"They (women) are 58 years old and they're in Grade 3," Watkins said. "These women are learning to read and write. They'll come and show you their notebooks and they're in Grade 3 and their grandchildren are helping them."

The WSA can also learn from the struggles of the Eritrean women. Middleton said the WSA is still fighting to convince Canadian farm women of the need to for legal contracts guaranteeing them ownership in their farms.

Yet Eritrean women have already won that battle.

Watkins told the WSA to send them that positive message: "We were shocked at some of the things in your lives but then we were awed by some of the things in your lives."

Soybean growers want 'fairness'

CHATHAM — The Ontario Oilseed Industry Association wants the federal government to establish a $7 million program to help export the industry's surplus soybean oil, a surplus which is depressing the incomes of Canadian producers and processors.

It's a question of fairness, says Owen Dobbyn, the chairman of the Ontario Soybean Growers' Marketing Board, a member of the oilseed association.

Dobbyn says the growers and processors want equality for both of Canada's two major oilseed crops.

To emphasize their stance, the association recently met with 18 Ontario MPs to convince Ottawa to establish the $7 million program. Association representatives said processors were working at 65 per cent of their production capacity because the surplus has depressed prices.

"We wanted to explain to our MPs that policies designed to help one oilseed crop, canola, have unintentionally hurt our soybean industry to the point where we are very concerned about our future viability. We do not believe the government should remove any of the exisiting benefits enjoyed by western Canada's canola crushers. But we are seeking some form of relief to take us through this difficult period," said Dobbyn.

"We are trying to present a strong case based on merit and economics, and we intend to get our numbers as involved as possible," he added.

Producers support think tank

GUELPH — Ontario's cattle producers have committed $100,000 to a University of Guelph project designed to formulate agricultural policy.

The Ontario Cattlemen's Association has offered $100,000 to the university to establish two academic positions, one in agricultural policy and a second in market analysis and development. These two academics will form the basis for the think tank, working with producer groups, industry and government to look at maximizing the benefits of policies and programs for the agricultural industry.

"We're interested in pursuing agricultural policy in a market oriented perspective," says OCA manager Graeme Hedley. "A lot of agricultural policy work is now being done inside government and never becomes public material in terms of policy analysis and decison-making."

The university think tank will be able to draw on expertise in many fields, including plant and animal production, food and nutrition, consumer studies and agricultural economics.

The think tank will begin with a look at the animal industry, but will eventually serve all sectors of the agricultural industry. The two academic specialists will conduct research in policy and market development, and will make their findings available to industry and government.

EO farmers prospering

WINCHESTER — The hard times appear to be all gone on the back concessions in Dundas County and things are looking up.

After about five years of penny pinching, Eastern Ontario farmers are going on a spending spree.

Equipment companies have reported high sales, a sign that farm debts are coming under control.

Bert Blom of Eagle Farm Equipment Ltd., says sales are up for the first three months of 1988 and most farmers are paying cash for equipment.

Blom says farmers are over the hump and on their way back to a solid financial base.

This year's Ontario realized net farm income could nudge $1.9 billion, compared with $1.7 billion in 1987, the highest on record, according to OMAF's economics department.

The mini-boom also means some farmers have stopped skimping on weed control and fertilizer programs.

According to Cliff Metcalfe, assistant manager of Kemptville's Harvex, sales of fertilizer could increase by as much as 20 per cent this year. His unit usually sells about 10,000 tonnes annually.

"No one's crying on anybody's shoulders" this year, he said.

In addition to a buoyant Ontario economy, the appearance of a new player, Elders IXL Ltd., an Australian multi-national, has fueled farmer optimism.

Elders has leased the grain elevators at Prescott and is pressuring other brokers by paying premium prices for cash crops.

Job opportunities are also on the rise with more companies looking to beef-up staff kept thin since the early 1980s.

"The companies were operating short-staffed through the leaner times and now they're expanding. They currently have more sales and management opportunities," said Basil Wren, Kemptville College public relations officer.

At the college, there were 6.1 permanent job openings for every student looking for a job in 1987, according to Len MacGregor, placement officer.

Last semester at the college, 109 permanent jobs in agribusinesses were advertised. In 1981, a mere handful of agribusinesses turned up at the college looking for graduates.

As well, job opportunities for summer employment appear to be higher than ever for KCAT students. Agribusinesses have advertised 58 positions while farmers were looking for more than 200. Most of the jobs could not be filled at the college because too few students were available.

Intelligence applied to silos

KEMPTVILLE — An engineer at Kemptville College is developing a computer program which can simulate human thought — a branch of artificial intelligence — to help farmers select the appropriate silo.

So far, Michael Toombs has established 40 rules and 20 parameters. Among them: cost, management, and style and personality of the farmer. While the program is complex, some of the conclusions might be obvious. A farmer afraid of heights is advised to avoid tower silos. Those who are clumsy are recommended a system where few mechanical problems can occur. If labor is limited, the program might suggest automation.

A farmer's future plans are also considered. Someone about to reduce herd size might be told to get a cheaper ag bag to store silage.

An early problem in developing the program had been to find the expert from whom to draw guidelines, including rules of thumb, and determine the probability of them working.

Toombs' expert behind the silo project is a Walkerton agricultural engineer, Hank Bellman. He has been writing about silos and talking to farmers about them for most of his working life. He retires in two years from his position of silage and forage systems specialist with the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food.

The program will go through a panel before it gets into the farmer's hands. This spring Toombs will present his program to a panel of agricultural engineers for criticism. He hopes the bugs can be worked out of the system by late summer when it will be sent out to county agricultural offices.

Toombs' approach has been patterned after a system of artificial intelligence used in medical diagnosis. The medical programmers, trouble-shooting for eye problems, were disappointed because they were correct only 60 per cent of the time. However, the results when compared to a 40 per cent success rate of doctors on a first diagnosis, gave the program more than a passing grade.

A pioneer in the application of artificial intelligence on the Canadian agricultural scene, Toombs has spoken recently to the second international conference on Computers in Agriculture in Florida. He will speak at the end of the summer to the Agricultural Institute of Canada.

Programs have been established for growing cotton and drying grain in the United States, but Toombs says he is not aware of any agricultural programs developed in Canada.

KCAT researching new cash crops

KEMPTVILLE — The college is testing two crops that have some potential as cash crops, canary grass and lupines.

The canary grass research has been requested by Elders Grain Co. Ltd., an Australian multinational, that has just released the Prescott grain elevators on the St. Lawrence River.

John Madill, a lecturer at the college, says canary grass is an annual used for bird seed. "We know there are problems with lodging," Madill says. "We have to find out how severe."

Two varieties, high and low canary grass, will be tested for yield and best planting time.

The second crop, lupines, is a high protein legume that is being considered as a substitute for soybean meal. Unlike soybean meal, lupines do not have to be processed. At 37 per cent, they have about twice the protein content of alfalfa.

Seven varieties have been put into the ground about mid-April as part of a province-wide testing program.

Madill says farmers in the area have been approached to grow the crop. He recommends they grow only "modest amounts and consider it a trial crop."

Lupines had been researched at the college in 1983, but yields were low because planting dates were late and the crop has heavy infestations of fungi. No work has been done on solving the fungi problem.

Landmark hunting trial brings poaching conviction

WILLIAMSBURG — On the night before hunting season opened last November, an airplane was flying low over Williamsburg Township.

The plane was carrying a "Loran C" on board, a navigational device that picks up brightly shining objects.

At the same time, 26-year-old Wayne Wolfe of Glen Becker was jacklighting deer in the woods along Church Road near Boucks Hill.

Jacklighting, the practice of night hunting deer with a bright light which freezes the deer in its tracks, is illegal.

The pilot of the plane contacted ground units to close in on the light and after a 10-mile chase Wolfe was caught.

This James Bond style of law enforcement is being used by the Ministry of Natural Resources to curb a growing problem in Eastern Ontario. It is no secret that the deer population has exploded but ministry officials are saying that too many people are hunting deer illegally and out of season.

Conservation officer John Downey said illegal hunting is becoming a serious problem in the area.

But the Wayne Wolfe case is unique in one other way. He wasn't caught with a gun or a spotlight. He had ditched both along the route and the gun was never found.

When Wolfe was pulled over after the chase, an empty rifle case, live ammunition and a motorcycle battery were found in his vehicle.

The spotlight was later recovered and forensic scientists proved that the plastic on the wire from the light matched a small piece found in Wolfe's vehicle.

The six-hour trial was held on March 28 but sentence wasn't handed down until April 25. Wolfe was fined $500 and his hunting license was suspended for one year.

"This case is really significant," said Downey. "He (Wolfe) wasn't actually found with a firearm."

Downey said that under the Fish and Game Act, hunting is generally defined as the activity of searching for game. He said this decision is a warning for someone who thinks the only way to get caught is to get caught in the act.

"The deer population is growing more and more — a lot of legitimate people are just looking — but a lot of people are going to shoot deer," he said.

"If looking (for deer) that's fine, but if found with a firearm in the vehicle, they can expect to answer come serious questions or even be charged."

Downey said he hopes the outcome of the Wayne Wolfe case will act as a "real deterrent" for anyone considering hunting out of season.

Birthday party

The Winchester office of the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food celebrated the ministry's centennial Monday with a luncheon for representatives of the county's farming community. The office will be having an open house May 4 to mark the anniversary. The dinner was hosted by Dundas ag rep Bob Humphries and the OMAF office staff. While the dinner was being held in Winchester, a re-creation of the swearing in of Ontario's first agriculture minister was taking place at Queen's Park. Press Photo—Riley

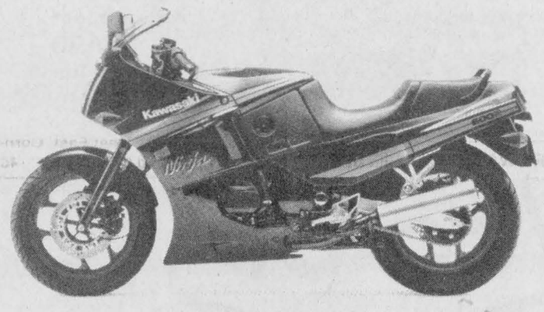
FLIGHT INSTRUMENT.



The new Ninja 600 was conceived with one thought in mind.
To set a new mid-size standard for punching a hole in the atmosphere.
The very slippery, full wrap-around fairing design is part of the reason it achieves that. The other part is what the fairing hides.
A howling twin cam, liquid-cooled, 16 valve in-line four that generates a monumental amount of lift off.
Thinner rings, larger piston pin and improved connecting rods for higher r.p.m. capability.
A redesigned formula-one racing style, two piece frame – steel up front for strength, aluminum in rear for light weight.
And a power-to-weight ratio that will simply catapult you.
If all you ever wanted to do is fly, it's easy. Just climb aboard, turn the key and call for clearance to take off.
The new Ninja 600 from Kawasaki.

In Memoriam

SUTTON — In loving memory of a dear dad, Gordon, who passed away May 10, 1985.
There is a bridge of memory,
From earth to heaven above,
It keeps you always near us,
It's called the bridge of love.
May you always walk in sunshine,
And God's love around you flow,
For the happiness you gave us,
No one will ever know.
It broke our hearts to lose you,
But you did not go alone,
For part of us went with you,
The day God called you home.

McTeer visits

by Lois Eadie

The Metcalfe Seniors' Wednesday club had an interesting and informative afternoon recently. Members of the club enjoyed a guided tour of the newest business operation in Osgoode Township, namely 'Greens Alive', Osgoode. Heather MacKneson, operational advisor, explained the steps in the growth and marketing of hydroponic lettuce and invited everyone to sample it.

After returning to the club, the seniors were visited by Mr. Bill Tupper and Mrs. Maureen McTeer.

Pro-life candidate surfaces

GLOUCESTER — Yet another hat has landed in the Carleton-Gloucester nomination ring.

Dermatologist Dr. Andre Lefrance says his concern for the unborn prompted his decision to offer his nomination for the PC candidacy.

Lafrance says he wants to offer an alternative to nominees Maureen McTeer and Philip Brazeau, both of whom stand on the pro-choice side of the fence.

"I believe that abortion is a very important issue that must be debated publicly," he says. "It is an issue that transcends political affiliation."

Although Lafrance is new to the PC scene — he ran provincially under the Family Coalition ticket, a small "C" conservative party based on promoting the importance of the family unit — he says the federal PCs have performed impressively over the last four years.

Adding that he has always felt that responsibility is one of the keys to a strong society, Lafrance applauds Michael Wilson's fiscal responsibility as a step in the right direction.

The unborn must be protected from the moment of conception, except if the life of the mother is threatened, he says, summing up his anti-abortion stance. He includes preservation of the family and Canada's natural resources and environment as other key issues.

A resident of Beacon Hill since 1971, Lafrance has been active in the Ottawa and District Association for the Mentally Retarded, and was a founding member of Physicians for Life. He has been a speaker and writer on behalf of the pro-life movement for the last seven years.

A job well done

Winchester native Monica Edwardson recently received the Gay Lea Award for achievement and contribution to outstanding competition work. Edwardson is studying culinary management at Toronto's Humber College.

David Waddell, left, and Rhonda McMillan share the Maple Ridge Public School Senior Public Speaking Trophy they won Friday. But the two lost out to Brinston's Tamara Bond, a Nationview Public School student, at the Dundas County championships Monday in Morrisburg.

Golden Years votes against Sunday shopping

The Winchester Golden Years Society held its regular meeting Hall with 92 present.

The meeting opened with the singing of O'Canada. The president, Myrna Cinnamon, welcomed everyone and read a "Thought on Easter", verses 1-10 of the 28th chapter of Matthew, and a new feature from the Voice magazine "Comfort Corner."

Seven birthdays and one anniversary were reported for the month and two visitors introduced.

Isobel Lewis gave a report of the zone meeting held at Mountain on April 9, some of the highlights being the U.S.C.O convention to be held in Kingston, Aug. 9-10, where we are entitled to send two voting delegates. The spring zone rally will be held at Dixons Corners on June 15.

The president read a request for funds from the Cancer Society; it was decided to send $50 to this cause.

A minute's silence was observed in memory of Violet Rennick and Mary Suffel who had both been members of the club. Ian Reid has placed several name pins on the Memorial Plaque since the last meeting.

A mini bake sale and euchre party was discussed and date set for Thurs., May 26.

A vote was taken on the matter of Sunday shopping; all the members voted against and the results will be forwarded to the Toronto office of U.S.C.O.

The seniors' church service in June will be held in the Anglican Church this year, with Rev. Pat Johnston offering to look after getting a speaker.

The seniors' band is to play for centennial celebrations in Chesterville on July 1 and in Winchester on Aug. 2.

Following grace read by the president a delicious pot-luck meal was enjoyed, in charge of Mary and Howard Biccum and their helpers.

The afternoon program was in charge of Viola Stewart and a sing-song with Eva Cinnamon at the piano and Hazel Irven leading some old favorites, was enjoyed. A skit was presented "Mail-Order Hat", the cast — Isabel Baker, Eva Johnstone, Ruby Steele, Isobel Lewis, Alma Acres and Eva Cinnamon, this was very humorous and entertaining. A reading by Violet Wilson "Springtime is like a melody", concluded the interesting program.

Nationview's T. Bond wins top speaker

MORRISBURG — A Nationview Public School Grade eight student won the Dundas County Intermediate Public Speaking contest last week.

Brinston's Tamara Bond beat out five other students with a speech explaining that children of divorced parents don't have as hard a time in life as people tend to think.

Bond, who picked up the W.J. Stewart Trophy for her performance, said people think children who suffer through the pains of their parent's divorce end up abusing alcohol or drugs and hang around with the "tough crowd."

But Thirteen-year-old Bond, a child of divorced parents herself, says that's not the case.

"It's not always a hard time, it's just a different time," she said. Bond cited one U.S. study that showed children under the age of 12 coming from split families scored higher on achievment tests.

Also competing in Morrisburg for the Dundas County championships were Kathy Bond of Nationview Public School plus two Maple Ridge students: Rhonda McMillan, grade eight and David Waddell, grade seven.

McMillan and Waddell were named top public speakers in their respective grades at a speak-off at Maple Ridge Public School Friday.

Waddell talked about being a school locker and how they are abused by the students and how lunches are often left in lockers until they turn moldy and begin to smell.

McMillan talked about her life of a babysitter and how the first time she looked after children they tried to drown the family cat in the bathtub.

The other two competitors in the contest were Pam Barkley of Iroquois Public School and Jeff Coleman of Morrisburg Public School.

WI membership soars to 87

The Winchester Women's Institute held their annual meeting on April 18 at the Lions Hall. A pot-luck supper preceded the regular business meeting.

The president, Norma Duncan, welcomed the members and visitors and expressed her pleasure with the progress and co-operation received during the year. The membership has soared to a record of 87 members; the majority were in attendance at the meeting. In 1988-89 the executive will be unchanged with Edna Trory as secretary, and Margaret Shadbolt, treasurer.

Freida Coons, program coordinator gave a full account of the year's activities while Isobel Lewis reported on public relations.

Olive Summers as Tweedsmuir history curator stated that the history book had been microfilmed. District director, Pearl Carkner reported on the recent district meeting. The district annual will be held at Chesterville on May 24.

On June 1 a special trip to the theatre in Ottawa is being planned for Dundas W.I. members. Centennial plans are continuing under the direction of the president as well as the committee of Margaret Johnstone and Hazel Dawson.

The time to begin regular meetings has been advanced to 7:30 beginning in May.

FOR THE LOVE OF GOD. GIVE.

The uniform is like a beacon on the street. It signals help. Compassion. Caring.

But not many people know how much it takes to be a soldier in the Salvation Army. The inhuman hours. The incredible patience. The brutal situations.

Taking responsibility for those whom society is unable to take responsibility for.

Providing help, and then hope, for the people who need it most.

But they know.

Anyone whose life the Salvation Army has touched knows.

And we ask for them, that you give.

As much as you can.

For the love of God.

Regional waste meeting in works

SPENCERVILLE — The chairman of the Grenville-Dundas waste management study will be setting up a meeting with the leaders of similar studies from municipalities throughout Eastern Ontario.

Study chairman Allan Gillis will send letters to the chairmen of other similar studies, suggesting that all should get together for a meeting. A date or location for such a meeting has yet to be set.

In March when the proposal for a regional meeting was first brought up, it was suggested that Minister of the Environment Jim Bradley be asked to co-ordinate such a meeting, but at a steering committee meeting Thursday in Spencerville Mr. Gillis said he felt that might take too long.

"I can write a letter to the minister," Mr. Gillis said, "but when will he respond? It might be better if I get in touch (with the study chairmen) and try to coordinate something with them."

Mr. Gillis said he had received a list from the MOE of all similar waste management studies but it included the entire province. He said he would extend invitations to the chairmen of studies throughout southeastern Ontario, but he wasn't sure just how many would be on the final guest list.

Some municipal representatives on the steering committee questioned the need for such a meeting, with some wondering aloud what, if anything, would be accomplished by bringing everyone together.

Richard Cave, a consulting engineer for the Grenville-Dundas study, said that such a session would be useful in that it would allow people involved in similar studies to compare notes and discuss their problems.

"There is a common interest in all of these plans," Mr. Cave said. "There may, and I repeat may, be an opportunity in the long run to share future (waste management) facilities with a view to reducing the costs to municipalities."

Mr. Gillis agreed, saying that local officials could learn from other studies that are further ahead than this one and "avoid some of the mistakes they made."

In addition to the chairmen of the studies, invitations will also be extended to the minister, the MOE's southeastern regional director and the director of the environmental assessment branch.

Home support provides 3,026 hours' service

by Eileen Galloway

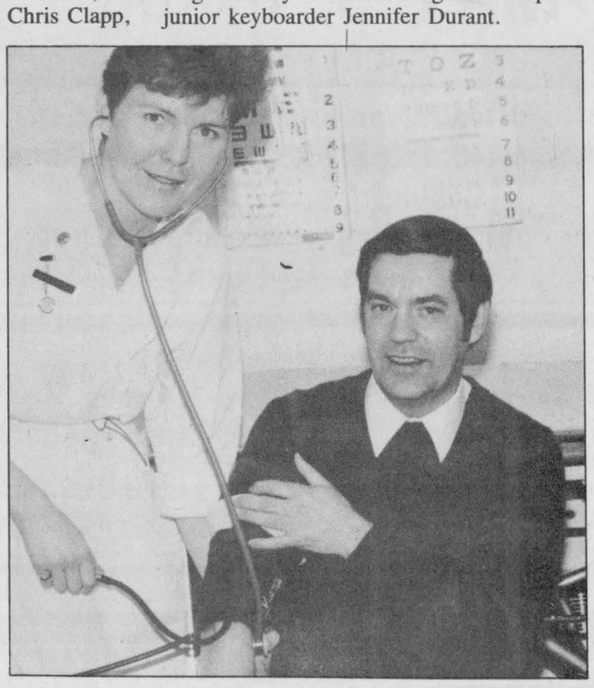
METCALFE — At a well attended annual meeting of the April 1988 Township of Osgoode Home Support Group held recently, reports indicated that about 60 volunteers have provided 3026 hours of service to 255 senior citizens in the municipality. The group provides friendly visits, telephone calls to shut-ins, transportation to medical appointments and monthly shopping buses from Metcalfe and Osgoode.

The home support group maintains an office in the Care Centre from 9am to 12 noon, Monday to Friday and to arrange transportation and provide other information call 821-1101.

In addition to the shopping bus and transportation to appointments, Osgoode Village area chairman Kay Bower reported that volunteers have served 1695 meals (consisting of Tuesday lunches and Friday hot dinners at the Drop-In Centre (826-2793) as well as providing transportation to them when required.

The slate of officers remains the same for the coming year, with two exceptions — Beverley Welk was elected as recording secreatry to replace Jeannie Dow who retired due to ill health, and Margaret Bruce will be vice-chairperson.

An effort is being made to recruit students willing to assist the frail or elderly with jobs such as outside yard work. Anyone wishing more information on this service may call the office — 821-1101 or the chairperson — 821-2096.



Blood pressure

Registered nurse Eleanor Merkley checks Dr. Henry Prins' blood pressure. Merkley will be one of the area nurses offering a blood pressure clinic sponsored in conjunction with Nurses' Week and the Dundas Chapter of the Heart and Stroke Foundation. The clinic will be held at Winchester's Seaway Valley Pharmacy on May 12, 9-11am and 1-3pm.

New slate for Vernon WI

Helen McDonald

A tasty pot-luck supper convened by Alison Campbell, Katie Campbell and Marg McDiarmid preceded the annual meeting of the Vernon W.I. on April 19, 1988.

The 1988-89 slate of officers are past-president Isobel McDiarmid; president Vivian Alexander; first vice-president Marg McDiarmid; second vice-president Jose Poole; secretary Heather Bellinger; treasurer Jose Poole; district director Ann Velthius and catering conveners Marg McDiarmid and Ann Velthius.

Delegates to the district annual on May 4 at Osgoode are Lil Sayant, Ann Velthuis, Isobel McDiarmid and Thelma Kennedy.

On May 14 from 9am to 1pm we will hold a bake sale and garage sale at the Cameron Equipment Shop in Vernon.
