Crysler Man Died Following Injuries in Fall

James Servage, a well-known retired farmer of Crysler, lost his life as a result of an accident Saturday afternoon when he fell from the tail of a milk wagon driven by his son, when the horses became frightened at a passing bakery wagon driven by Armand Legault of Crysler. As the horses jumped forward in fright, Servage was thrown on his head, sustaining a concussion from which he passed away shortly before midnight the same day. Dr. Gormley, coroner, decided that death was purely accidental and an inquest will not be held.

Streets and Roads Dangerous

Another change in the weather has brought about very slippery conditions on the streets and roads in this section. Following heavy snow of a day or two ago, rain set in late yesterday afternoon and continued nearly all night. At first it froze on wires and trees but a still further rise in temperature released the ice and melted the snow, leaving a glare ice underfoot. Motor cars are reeling around on the slightest provocation as if intoxcated. Old Probs, however, promises a return to lower temperatures later in the day.

HARD-TIMES DANCE ENJOYED

A fair crowd turned out to the "Hard Times" dance under auspices of the Relief Committee in the Town Hall Monday evening. Prizes were awarded for "hard times" costumes to Mr. and Mrs. A. Morris. Dancing was enjoyed until past midnight to the music of Joe Dixon's Orchestra.

DROWNED IN VANCOUVER.

A wire was received Sunday by Mr. Chas. Fulton, acquainting him with the death by drowning at Vancouver of Colborne Robinson, formerly of Chesterville, and whose wife is a sister of Mrs. Fulton. No particulars of the drowning have yet been received. Mr. Robinson was connected with the lumber business in the western city.

Mrs. Wesley Rice, Winchester Formerly Resided Here

The death occurred on Sunday at 1.40 p.m., after a lengthy illness, of Mrs. Wesley Rice, a resident of Winchester for the past 20 years, at the age of 73 years. Her maiden name was Melissa Kittle, and she was a daughter of the late Thomas and Caroline Kittle, and formerly a resident of Chesterville. The funeral was held on Monday from her late residence on Main street to the United Church where the service was conducted by her pastor, Rev. J. McKay, who was assisted by Rev. W. W. Turner and Rev. D. W. Summers. Interment was made in Maple Ridge Cemetery.

She leaves to mourn: her husband and one son, Carl Rice of Winchester, also a son, Myles Reid, of Vancouver, B.C., a daughter, Mrs. Willis Harper, of Chesterville, by a former marriage; also a step-son, W. R. Reid, Wasco, Oregon, and six grandchildren; one brother, Elon Kittle, of Syracuse. The pall bearers were Herbert Faith, Jas. McLaughlin, Millie Baker and Albert Servage.

The floral offerings were: a wreath from the husband, Mr. and Mrs. Willis Harper and Hubert, Mr. and Mrs. Aden Bowman, Mr. and Mrs. Myles Reid and family; sprays—Mr. and Mrs. Carl Rice and Alice, Mr. Martin Fader and family, Mr. and Mrs. Chester Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Angus, Dr. and Mrs. Sherwood; cut flowers—Mr. and Mrs. John Robinson.

Relatives and friends attending the funeral from a distance were:—Mr. and Mrs. Casey Rice, Mrs. Thomas Andrews, Mrs. Allan Rice and Mr. Howard Rice of Gouverneur, N.Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Pat McGuire of Syracuse, N.Y.; Miss Katie Harper, Miss Beulah McLean, Mrs. Eli Harper, Mr. and Mrs. D. P. McNaughton and Mack of Chesterville, and Mrs. Bert Deussium of Ottawa.

MOREWOOD MAN PRESIDENT OTTAWA AND DISTRICT HOCKEY

At the annual meeting of the Ottawa and District Hockey Association in Ottawa on Saturday, Mr. W. B. Carlyle of Morewood, was elected to the head of that organization for the coming year. Dr. S. H. Hutt of the local club is a member of the registration committee.

"What happens to people who are so foolish as to allow themselves to become run down?" asks a doctor. They wind up in a hospital.

Town League Re-Organizes With Seven Teams Entered

Tuesday night last year's Supper-Time League broke up and this year's Town League emerged, comprised of the following teams and managers:

Dunbar, Geo. K. Casselman.
Clerks, Alf. Jarvis.
T. B. Tested—Dunc McElheran and Syd Morris.
Nation Valley, Jack Munro.
Limerick Rangers, John Heveran,
Bankers, Eric Casselman.
Hy Bessin's Beavers, Deb Hummel.

The following officers were elected for the season,

Hon. President—O. L. King,
President—Jack Munro,
Vice-President—Eric Casselman,
Sec.-Treas.—R. Campderros.

It was decided to have a double schedule and at the end of the season have the first and third, second and fourth teams play off with the winners playing for the league championship.

Games will be played as double-headers with the first game starting at seven o'clock sharp, no overtime will be played and in case of a tie each team will count one point with two points for a win. Next week the league opens with double-headers on Tuesday and Friday nights. The admission for a double will be 15c with 50 per cent of the gate receipts going to the contending teams.

On Tuesday night at seven, Nation Valley will start off the season playing against Bessin's Beavers, followed by the Rangers against a new team to the league, the T. B. Tested. Friday night Alf Jarvis' club starts against last year's would-be champions, the Bankers, followed by Dunbar vs. Nation Valley.

You enjoyed these games last year. Be on hand to receive your share of the fun this year.

The schedule has not yet been completed but by next week's issue of The Record it is expected to be ready for the press.

* * * *

The Bankers will have practically a new line-up this year, with only Campderros, Art McElroy, Waldroff and Fulton of last year's players being available. However they expect to give a good account of themselves. They have one new defenceman who says he can stop any opposing player that he can reach. Come and see Jim Slosser knock 'em.

* * * *

An interesting feature this year will be the race for scoring honours among Harry McElroy, Jim Slosser, Hosea Droppo and Jim Foley. This is rather reminiscent of the race among turtles.

* * * *

It is rather doubtful if Tommy Bourke will be able to get in shape unless he is aspiring to be a goal-keeper and "fill the net."

SIR ARTHUR CURRIE PASSES

It was announced this morning from Montreal that Sir Arthur Currie had passed away after an illness of three weeks in a Montreal hospital, where he had been taken when a clot of blood had developed in a small vessel in his brain. Complications brought on pneumonia which was the cause of his death. He was Commander-in-Chief of Canadian forces in France during the Great War.

Milk Will Again Be Supplied By Local Women's Institute

There was a large attendance at the meeting of the Women's Institute yesterday afternoon. For the third year the Institute is supplying milk to the under-nourished school children.

Miss Addie Campderros, who was sent as a delegate to the Girls' Conference held in Kemptville, gave an excellent account of the three days spent at the college.

Mrs. Bernard Gibbons, delegate to the Eastern Convention held in Ottawa, presented her report, which was a complete resumé of the proceedings. Both speakers were given a hearty vote of thanks for their splendid reports.

In honour of St. Andrew's Day, Mrs. C. W. Casselman gave a humourous Scotch reading, "The Courtship of Sanders McLachlin."

Dainty refreshments were served by the committee in charge of the social hour: Mrs. P. S. Boyd, Mrs. F. W. Merkley, Mrs. G. Hunt, Mrs. Ford, Mrs. H. H. Casselman and Mrs. L. H. Doering. The meeting closed with the singing of "God Save the King."

Buying Branch Opened Here By Canada Packers Ltd.

On Friday, November 16th, Chesterville had a business visit from Mr. H. G. Groundwater, who is president of Gunn, Langlois and Company Limited, also general manager of Canada Packers, Limited, Montreal. With Mr. Groundwater was Mr. John I. Brown, vice president of Gunn, Langlois and Co., Ltd., which company represents the Poultry and Produce Section of Canada Packers Limited in Montreal.

The object of their visit was to look over the district and especially the town of Chesterville, as a buying centre, for live and dressed poultry, and also eggs, honey, maple syrup, etc.

Mr. Brown returned again on Monday of this week and has advised The Record that they have decided to open a buying branch here at once. Temporary quarters have been secured in Flynn's Hotel Sample Rooms as per their announcement in another column.

Canada Packers need no introduction to the Canadian public as they operate packing plants at Toronto and Peterboro, Ont., Hull and Montreal, Que.; Winnipeg, Man., and Chicago, U.S.A.

Besides these packing plants, Canada Packers Limited operate a chain of creameries in Western Ontario and have buying and trading branches all over Canada.

Chesterville welcomes this buying branch and wishes Canada Packers Limited every success here.

Morewood School Teacher In Highway Accident

While motoring to Crysler on Tuesday evening from Morewood, Fred Weaver, Public School teacher of Morewood, collided with a hay press driven by Mr. Charlie Loughridge and Mr. Racine.

It is alleged no light was carried on the hay press and this, combined with the newly fallen snow on the road, prevented the auto's lights in showing up the object in time and the driver was unable to avoid crashing into the horses and press. Weaver's car was badly smashed and one of the horses received a bad cut on the knee. Fortunately no one was injured.

Father and Sons Guilty Of Numerous Burglaries

Cornwall.—Because the operations of the accused had extended over two counties and two court jurisdictions, two magistrates occupied the bench in police court here Monday morning to hear 17 charges of breaking and entering and theft, laid against four Williamsburg men. Magistrate J. C. Milligan, of Cornwall, tried cases in which offences were committed in Stormont, while Magistrate John McCormick, Winchester, handled those occurring in Dundas.

The accused pleaded guilty on all counts. Lloyd Henry, 24, alleged ringleader of a theft ring which preyed on cheese factories, creameries, service stations and small stores throughout the district for the past six weeks, was sentenced to two years in Portsmouth penitentiary on each of the eight charges against him, the terms to run concurrently.

Fred Pomeroy, 50, was sentenced to one year definite and six months indefinite at the Ontario reformatory. His 19-year-old son, Harold, to a year definite and a year indefinite. A small younger Pomeroy boy, Douglas, 17, was allowed to go on suspended sentence.

Magistrate McCormick castigated the elder Pomeroy for leading his sons into a life of crime.

Another Iroquois Youth Disappears From Same Home

Iroquois. — John Peters, Indian youth, eldest son of Louise Peters, who has been in custody since October 14th for an alleged stabbing attack on her brother, Dave, disappeared a few days ago from the home of Mr and Mrs. William Roberts, College Street. On Sunday, November 19th, Percy Clarence Roberts, their 18 year-old son, left home and has not been seen since.

Since the Peters' home on Indian Island, a mile west of Iroquois, was broken up over the stabbing affair, young John and his brothers, Angus and Mitchell, had been cared for at the Roberts 'home.

To all appearances, the young Indian was perfectly content with his new surroundings, and attended the local school with his brothers. It is understood plans were being made to place the boys in a residence school by the Indian agent at St. Regis and the authorities. John was not anxious to attend school.

Will Grey, another Indian, who had also been living with the Roberts, was recently ordered off the Peters' property by Dave, who alleged he had been picking and selling his hickory nuts in great quantities. Grey left the Peters' home to go to his home in Ogdensburg, N.Y., and it is thought young John accompanied him there.

So far the search for Percy Clarence Roberts, which led to Montreal, has failed to unearth any information as to his whereabouts Efforts to locate John Peters have also been unavailing.

Filled Cookies.

Use dates, raisins or figs; to ½ pound fruit add ½ cup sugar and ½ cup boiling water and cook to a thick paste. Cool before using. A tablespoonful of lemon juice may always be added to sharpen flavour. Put filling between two rounds of cookie dough, press edges together and bake at 450 degrees F., or use the filling to sandwich baked cookies together. Butter icing may be used as a filling.

ATHOLL BROSE.

THE honey industry and agriculture both benefit by the consumption of Atholl brose, a favourite meal of the Scottish Highlands, which is punctiliously served when the King pays his annual visit to Balmoral. The brose consists mostly of oatmeal, honey, sometimes cream, and a modicum of whiskey. For a small amount, one-quarter pound of oatmeal is steeped in cold water which has been previously boiled. After the oatmeal has been steeped for several hours the water is drained off and half a pound of honey and a cupful of whiskey added. This is thoroughly mixed, taking care to break up any wax if present. At social gatherings, Atholl brose is made in a large bowl, set in the middle of the table, each man ladling out a portion, ladies being served first. Atholl brose is regarded as a certain cure for coughs and colds.

Reception at The Springs For Newlywed Couple

An enjoyable evening was spent in the Orange Hall, Winchester Springs, on Monday evening in honour of Mr. and Mrs. Irwin Casselman. About 11 o'clock the couple were called to the floor and the following address was read by Mr. Cecil Casselman.

Winchester Springs, Nov. 27, 1933.
Der Mr. and Mrs. Casselman,—

It is with thoughts of greatest pleasure that we, your friends and neighbours, have assembled here tonight to welcome you and show the high esteem in which you are held by your community.

We have mingled in your company for several years, and in the varied walks of neighborly and social intercourse you have contributed abundantly.

Recollecting these pleasant years we could not allow this happy event in your lives to pass without expressing our appreciation.

Mrs. Casselman, while you do not come from far distant we want to welcome you and may you feel welcome in all our social functions at all times.

We ask you to accept our sincere good wishes for a long and prosperous wedded life. That Heaven may be bountinful in bestowing upon you the richest blessings and that your sorrows and trials in life may be few are our heartfelt wishes.

We ask you to accept these gifts, not for their intrinsic value, but as a token of our friendship. May they adorn your home and may they always remind you of the delightful occasion which we celebrate tonight.

Signed on behalf of your friends and neighbours—Johnnie Bolton, Billie Kirkwood, Jay Bailey, Cecil Casselman, Archie Bailey, Ferguson Frantz.

After receiving the gifts, Mr. Casselman replied in a few suitable words and invited all to visit them, and thanked all on behalf of his wife and himself.

The crowd then joined hands and sang "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows." A dainty lunch followed. Dancing was then indulged in until the wee small hours. The music by Mr. Casselman's three-piece orchestra was greatly appreciated. The party was brought to a close by the singing of the National Anthem.

A poker enthusiast asked a party of three to his house for an evening's play. When the guests had gone the host was appropriately vicious, having lost a fiver.

As he was leaving the room, he noticed a silver teaspoon on the carpet. He picked it up and glowered at it.

"I wonder," he muttered, "which of them has a hole in his pocket?"

Free Parcel Post Insurance Effective Now in Canada

Effective immediately, all parcels posted in Canada for delivery in Canada may be insured up to $50 without insurance fee, if so requested by the sender. The same insurance procedure as at present will be followed except that on the sender's receipt for such parcels the item "fee" shall be checked with an X. If the sender desires to insure such parcels in excess of $50 the regular insurance fee of 12c to cover the additional insurance must be prepaid. Effective immediately, all parcels weighing more than one pound, posted in Canada for delivery in Canada, will be liable to postable at the rate applicable to the nearest pound. For example: A parcel weighing from 1 lb. up to 1 lb. 8 oz. will be liable to postage at the rate for a 1-lb. parcel. A parcel weighing from 2 lbs. up to 2 lbs. 8 oz. will be liable to postage at the rate for a 2 lb. parcel, etc., etc. A parcel weight from 10 lbs. up to 10 lbs. 8 oz. will be liable to postage at the rate for a 10-lb. parcel. A parcel weighing from 15 lbs. up to 15 lbs. 8 oz. will be liable to postage at the rate for a 15-lb. parcel.

"Yes," said the boastful young man, "my family can trace its ancestry back to William the Conqueror."

"I suppose," sneered his friend, "you'll be telling us that your ancestors were in the Ark with Noah?"

"Certainly not," said the boaster. "My people had a boat of their own."

Ten Rules For Happy Marriage

Chicago.—Joseph Sabath, famous divorce judge, who has tried 40,000 such cases, but is most proud of his record of effecting reconciliation in 2,100 cases, to-day started his 24th year on the bench convinced that most people land in divorce courts because of trivialities.

"There are, of course," he said to-day, "the divorces that are made necessary by drunkenness, the star boarder, gin marriages, non-support, and just plain mismating. But for the most part the persons who come into my court want separation because of trivialities."

For marital happiness the judge suggested these rules:

1. Have patience with each other.
2. Work together, play together, grow up together.
3. In all disputes avoid hot and excited talk.
4. Do not conceal little differences until they accumulate to the breaking point, discuss them calmly.
5. Be frank with each other.
6. Sympathy and mutual understanding are the pillars of the home.
7. Good humour in parting in the morning and a cheerful greeting at night.
8. Share responsibilities.
9. Establish a home of your own.
10. Make your bedtime prayers a review of the day and never go to sleep without a clean slate, leaving no leftovers for the next day.

Local Cheesemaker Among Winners 100 P.C. Product

The annual district dairy meeting for the county of Dundas was held on November 16 at Brinston and was well attended. Interesting addresses were delivered by George Barr, director of dairying; Freman Brown, an official grader, and Thomas Johnson, reeve of Matilda Township. The instructors, J. Bolton and J. Cobey, also gave very favourable reports of their season's work.

Mr. A. C. Casselman, M.P, and the Honourable George H. Challies, M.L.A., generously donated cups to the cheese makers who made 100 per cent cheese in the year 1933. These cups were presented by J. J. Payne secretary of the Iroquois Cheese Board to the following cheesemakers:

J. Bolton, Winchester; W. F. Coleman, Mountain; George Martin, Hallville; Albert Gauthier, Chesterville.

A McGruer was unanimously elected director for the district for the coming year.

Pleasant Valley

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Swerdfeger, Norma and Bryce spent Sunday with Mr. W. Swerdfeger of Hoasic.

Mr. Ralph Fetterly visited with Mr. W. Fetterly of Farran's Point recently.

The Women's Association of the United Church of Osnabruck Centre met at the home of Mr. Ralph Fetterly on Tuesday.

We are sorry to hear of the illness of Miss Wilda Swerdfeger and little Miss Hilda Beauclaire. Both are improving at the time of writing.

Master Roy Hollister spent Saturday with Kenauld Scott.

The visiting director of education was complaining that the school was not properly cleaned. Rubbing his finger on a big globe, representing the world, he said: "Look at this, it's covered with dust."

"But, after all," protested the school-kepper, "that part you've touched is the Sahara desert."

PERFECT MAPLE LEAF

The most beautiful maple leaf, prize winner in the nation-wide competition conducted by the Canadian Pacific Railway, was submitted by Mrs. C. McConnell, Fredericton R. No. 3, York County, New Brunswick. It has a flare of autumn coloring ranging from light yellow to deep blood red, and its perfect symmetry and form won it distinction in competition with 10,000 other beautiful leaves, submitted by enthusiastic Canadians from Coast to Coast. The leaf, a thing of sheer beauty, was selected by such outstanding artists as C. W. Simpson, R.C.A., R. W. Pilot, R.C.A., and James Crockert.

In the largest leaf phase of the competition, six-year-old Bobby Hume, of Revelstoke, B.C., made an astonishing win with a leaf showing an area of 222 square inches.

The success which greeted the original competition this year has encouraged Canadian Pacific officials to plan for another competition on a larger and more comprehensive scale next fall.

"Has your wife changed very much since you married her?"

"Yes—My habits, my friends, and my hours."

The owner of a cheap watch brought it into the jeweller's shop to see what could be done for it.

"The mistake I made, of course," he admitted, "was in dropping it."

"Well, I don't suppose you could help that," the jeweller remarked. "The mistake you made was in picking it up."

The Port of Sleepless Men

A Poignant Description of That Section of Gay Paris Where Human Derelicts Gather in Droves.

HUMAN DISTRESS at its worst is to be found in the most romantic half mile of Europe, along the bridges of Paris from the Pont des Arts past the Pont Neuf and the Ile de la Cite, to the Ile St. Louis, writes Louis Roy, Canadian Press Correspondent in Paris.

At night when shadows emerge from shadows, old couples appear from no one knows where, going hand in hand and disappearing again into the night. It is not days without bread, nights without fire, weeks, even months without money that these have known; it is a whole lifetime without the necessities of life.

They are like a fantastic chorus, giving its peculiar note to the twilight in the shadow of Notre Dame, ushering in the drama of which this splendid circle is the scene, from midnight until dawn.

Between 11 o'clock and midnight the others come, the sleepless ones. They too are without a goal, without fire, without homes, but there is this difference: these are aristocrats of disaster, the exiles, the banished; those who without everything else are without a country too.

They are drawn mostly from the colony of 100,000 white Russians in Paris. Their distress has its own geography in the City of Light. They do not eat with the poor; they do not sleep with the destitute.

In the daytime they can be seen in the gardens of the Palais Royal. This spot, looked down upon by the famous Chess Club, hemmed in by well-known restaurants, old haunt of kings, cardinals, guardsmen and gamblers, savours of the epicure. They sit there the space of a gentleman's leisure. Then they talk.

There are those among them who have walked three days and three nights, jostling shoulders with the pleasure-seekers of Paris, from whom there is nothing to distinguish them except their eyes Restless eyes; they have no illusions.

There comes a moment when to go on is to collapse. It is at such moments that these men seek what the Parisians have chosen to nickname: "The Port of Sleepless Men."

It is well named, this port, into which the convulsions of the world have swept the human wreck of dynasties. Above in the silence of midnight the light of the yellow lamps throw up the outlines of Notre Dame and the Palais de Justice in distorted grandeur. The towering immensity above is matched by the moving immensity beneath. The Seine at this point gathers light to elucidate its python-like motion.

The stone wall of the quay is steep, abrupt, black, like an escarpment of the infinite. Steps lead from the quay to the wharf below. There is something terribly distinguished about the men, half dead with sleep, as they descend these steps.

That strange half light, the grandiose surroundings, the spirit of the place emphasize some remote obstinacy in their bearing, some secret element of aristocracy, brought out in the crucible of an incurable destiny, something solid like a principle and masterful like an instinct. Perhaps, almost certainly, it is that elusive, indefinable, persistent thing called "race."

From the wharf the great arch of the bridge keeps off the autumn rain. The bend of the wall at the Port Neuf checks the wind. Enough scraps of wood and caulkings of disused boats lie about to keep the fire going all night. At times the wind catches the flame of the wood fire and tortures and twists it into a flare. The lines of a head, the turn of a shoulder, the play of a hand reveal here a famous general, there a renowned musician or a celebrated savant.

Strahoff comes here, the Russian composer, Fedorov, Milioukoff, champion of the Duma against the Czar. There are among them ex-land barons, Spanish grandees, aristocrats for whom the world has no longer any use.

They sit, these exiles of destiny, and stare, as if trying to pierce a profound and fateful enigma; they stare like men who have lost the habit of sleep. Their voices are low, as if they feared to awake the city asleep above their heads.

Beyond, the long lights of Paris reflect themselves in the waters like endless illusions. Here and there one of the men falls suddenly over, asleep with that profound sleep in which all life seems suspended.

And in the morning they fade away like ghosts. All that remains are the charred ashes of a workman's fire.

"I'll teach you to make love to my daughter!"

"Please do. I'm not making much progress."

"How is your wife enjoying her Mediterranean cruise?"

"Well, she writes me from every port she touches, and touches me from every port she writes from."

They took their seats in the carriage. Mac took out his pipe and lit it, and Sandy produced a cigar.

"Hello, mon," said Mac, "where did ye get that cigar?"

"A body gave it to me," replied Sandy, preparing to light it.

"A fr-r-riend?" asked Mac.

"I dinna ken," replied the other. "I haven't smoked it yet."

Miscellaneous Shower Given In Honour of Elma Bride-to-be

On Tuesday evening about 50 young friends and neighbours gathered at the home of Mrs. McKenzie in Elma in honour of her niece, Miss Beulah McKenzie, to spend a social evening prior to her approaching marriage. A very pleasant evening was spent in games and music. About 11 o'clock the crowd was called to order and the following address was read by Miss Alice Beckstead.

Chesterville, Ont., Nov. 28th, 1933.

Dear Beulah,—

While wedding bells are ringing in your direction, we, your neighbours and associates, have assembled this evening to do you honour on the eve of your approaching marriage.

As you will soon be leaving us, we hope and trust that the long avenue of your wedded life may be well illuminated with health, happiness and prosperity; and that the memories of former associations with us, may ever be bright.

We feel quite sure that you will not forget us, but we do want you to have some tangible gifts to carry with you to your new home as a happy remembrance of this eventful evening.

During your associations with us, you have won for yourself our best respects and to substantiate this fact, we ask you to accept these tokens, and as you use them, may you sense all the love and good wishes which accompany them.

Signed on behalf of your friends:
—Gertrude Barkley, Hilda McMartin, Olive McIntosh.

Miss McKenzie thanked her friends for remembering her at this important step of life. All joined in singing "For She's a Jolly Good Fellow." Refreshments were served and the gathering dispersed.

With The Boy Scouts

TOY SHOP DANCE BIG SUCCESS.

In spite of the rain and ice last night a fine crowd turned out to our Toy Shop Dance in the Town Hall and another fine lot of toys was collected. A large table was placed inside the door for the toys to be placed on, and this was heaped up with sleighs, dolls, games books and mechanical toys. Our shop also benefitted in a financial way for those without toys paid a quarter admission and this netted us $10.00. This means we are now able to supply paint and other materials for our repairmen to complete their work. We have plenty of work ahead now for all hands to have these toys completed by Christmas.

Joe Dixon's Orchestra, composed of six pieces, gave us splendid music and "a good time was had by all." The floor was comfortably filled and would have been crowded to capacity had we have had a decent night. The Hydro power went off about 7.30 and we thought all was lost, but the lights came on again in a few minutes and everything went off as arranged. We were notified later that the power would be shut off about 10.30 so we secured lights through the kindness of Mr. Howard Fulton, member of our Group Committee, who loaned us an Aladdin lamp and a number of candles which filled the bill when the lights went out at 11.30 until midnight when dancing was brought to an end.

The Scouts are very thankful to the members of the orchestra for the splendid help given even though the members have several other engagements billed for this week.

Mr. Walter Carr, another member of our Committee, filled the cashier's job at the door.

The work in the shop goes forward with feverish interest. A large number of toys were gathered from our appeal to the pupils of the three schools of town, and many of these were repaired, ready for a coat of paint, on Saturday afternoon. Our harvest consisted of mechanical and pull toys, dolls, a doll house and furniture and story books. A few are beyond redemption, but many of them will brighten the hearts of little ones in town this Christmas.

The boys were busy throughout the afternoon; some were garagemen, and others mechanics, physicians, upholsterers, while others tried their luck at bookbinding. A portion of time of each meeting night will be allotted to the repair shop as well as time after school during the week and again on Saturday afternoons until all work has been completed to the Satisfaction of Santa Claus.

Chances of our getting in the running for toys in the Buckingham Contest look quite slim. We have until next Friday to collect the empties but our hopes of obtaining the necessary 100,000 votes are not of the best. If we had been aware of the competition earlier in the season we probably would have stood a better chance, but anyhow, we will profit from our experience.

MEETING ON SATURDAY

Our weekly meeting at Headquarters will be held on Saturday afternoon instead of to-morrow night as the High School Commencement falls on that date and many of our boys will be taking part while others are anxious to attend and watch their fellow-students perform. Two o'clock is the hour set for flag-break, so all boys will be in their corners at least five minutes before that time. After the opening and a game the patrol corners' period will be spent in the Toy Shop.

Splendid Knot Work.

At last week's session, our second batch of recruits passed their Tenderfoot knots in first class manner. They had, undoubtedly, spent a good deal of time and study on their knot tying for, without a doubt, they tied the six knots blindfolded and otherwise with precision unequalled by any of the former boys examined.

When Whiskey and Slaves Were Sold at Public Auction

A rare document recently came to light which indicates quite clearly that neither the Thirteenth nor the Eighteenth Amendment was even thought of in old Kentuck some 85 years ago, says The Santa Fe Magagzine.

The document in question is a rare old bill of sale, listing property as it was offered for sale in the year 1849 and reads as follows:

"Having sold my farm, and as I am leaving for Oregon Territory by oxen team on March 1, 1849, I will sell all of my personal property, except two oxen teams, Buck and Ben and Lon and Jerry, consisting of the following: Two milk cows, 1 gray mare and colt, 1 pair oxen, 1 yoke, 1 baby yoke, 2 ox carts, 1 iron plough with wood mole board, 200 feet of poplar weather boards, 1,000 three-foot clapboards, 1,500 ten-foot fence rails, 1 60-gallon soap kettle, 85 sugar troughs made of white ash timber, 10 gallons of maple syrup, 2 spinning wheels, 30 pounds mutton tallow, 1 large boom made by Perry Wilson, 300 poles, 100 split hoops, 100 empty barrels, 1 32-gallon barrel of Johnson-Miller whisky, 7 years old; 20 gallons of apple brandy, 1 40-gallon copper still, 4 sides of oak tanned leather, 1 dozen wooden pitchforks and one-half interest in tan yards, 1 32-calibre rifle, bullet molds and powder rifle made by Ben Mills, 50 pounds of soft hams, bacon and lard, 40 gallons of sorghums, 6 head of fox hounds, all soft mouthed but one.

"At the same time I will sell my 6 Negro slaves: 2 men, 35 and 50 years old; 2 boys, 12 and 1 years old, and two mulatto wenches, 40 and 30 years old. Will sell together to the same party, as I will not separate them.

"Terms of sale—Cash in hand or note to draw 4 per cent interest with Bob McConnell security. My home is two miles south of Versailles, Kentucky, on McConnell ferry pike. Sale will begin at 8 o'clock a.m. Plenty to eat and drink."

Life Saving Efforts

Fighting for the lives of men, women and children, is a never ceasing struggle at the Muskoka, the Toronto and the Queen Mary Hospitals, where nearly a thousand patients are now being treated for tuberculosis.

Perhaps you do not fully realize the predicament of the unfortunate victims of this dreaded disease, the majority of whom came from the families of the very poor.

Living in cramped quarters, where sunshine and fresh air are often as scanty as nourishing food, is it any wonder that consumption finds them out.

Frail and weak and tired, their plight is pitiful, but a haven awaits, where, with your help, most of them may be restored to health.

Will you please send what you can to assist in this great work. Please address George A. Reid, Treasurer, 223 College Street, Toronto 2.

WINTER FEEDING MARKET PIGS.

WINTER FEEDING of market pigs requires a specialized procedure since pastures are not available, and the pigs must be reared entirely without this form of exercise and green feed. Thus the winter ration must be supplemented, so that these depreciations will be made up. Succulence in the form of well-cured alfalfa or clover hay should be fed to pigs of over 100 pounds, while pigs under this weight should receive milk, roots or even a small amount of the above-mentioned hay. Hay or roots should not be made the sole feed for winter fed hogs. In fact, it is not always even advisable to use hay under the self-feeding system where the pigs can eat all they desire. Rather, hay of good quality should be fed in limited amounts, the pigs deriving the large part of their nutriment from a mixture of coarse grains.

Mineral mixtures are more important in winter feeding than during the summer when the pigs have access to the earth through use of pastures. A self-feeder with a constant supply of mixed minerals is well worth while. Another good supplement to winter feeding is the regular use of sods. From the way pigs work over a sod thrown to them there is evidently considerable mineral nutriment gained from this source. Salt, needless to say, is a very necessary constituent of the swine ration and its use pays its actual cost many times over.

A good eastern mineral mixture is: Bone meal or bone char, 25 pounds; ground limestone, 50 pounds, and salt, 25 pounds. This can be used in a self feeder, or by mixing in the meal ration at the rate of 1 to 2 per cent.

DISTRESS, DISEASE AND DEATH

WHEN it is realized that distress, disease and even death may follow upon the use of food, it becomes obvious that as we are all frequent and regular consumers of food, we should be informed on this subject.

We might begin by correcting a common misunderstaning. There is no such thing as ptomaine poisoning, as the term is commonly used. There ARE ptomaines, and they ARE poisonous, but they are not present in food which can be eaten. Ptomaines are produced in the late stages of putrefaction, when food is in such a condition that no one would eat it.

It is well known that, at certain seasons, some fishes and animals are unwholesome. We know too that there are some poisonous vegetable foods, such as in the group of mushrooms and other fungi.

The real danger to us, however, comes from foods which, in themselves, are perfectly harmless, but which may and do become dangerous if they are contaminated by certain bacteria or germs. Some changes in foods, which result from the action of germs, are desirable, such as the souring of milk, the making of cheese and sauer kraut. The effects of a few germs are harmful and dangerous.

Botulism is a form of food poisoning which fortunately is rare, because it is deadly. It is caused by the poison that is given off by a germ. In this country most cases have resulted from the use of home-canned vegetables, where in the canning process sufficient heat has not been supplied to sterilize the food or destroy the germs. This poison is readily destroyed by heat, and if these canned foods are boiled before being used they are rendered safe.

The common form of food poisoning, which begins with nausea, abdominal pain, vomiting and diarrhœa and which is popularly, but erroneously, known as ptomaine poisoning is seldom fatal. It is caused by the action of any one of several germs which are related to the germ of typhoid fever. As a rule, it is due to the careless handling of food or to improper cooking.

There is no danger in fresh fruits or vegetables. Cooked foods should be kept cold or hot; they should not be allowed to stand for any length of time at a luke-warm temperature, as that offers germs an excellent chance to grow. Foods that do not look right or which have a peculiar or unusual taste or odour should be avoided. Canned foods should be boiled before being used.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 194 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

"Was that the minister going down your steps just now laughing and whistling?"

"Yes, Martha. Religion isn't what it used to be."

NEWS AND INFORMATION FOR THE BUSY FARMER

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture

Preparing Perennial Borders For Winter Months

A very good thing to remember when mulching plants for winter is that the ideal protection keeps the plants cold, which means that the mulch should be applied when the ground is frozen hard for the first time that season.

Corn fodder or strawy manure, besides being easily obtainable, are to be preferred to leaves as the latter forms an almost air-tight mat and very often results in trouble by causing premature growth of the plants.

Store Farm Machinery To Undergo Winter Repair

Place all farm equipment under cover at this time of year, but store it with a view to convenience in removing to repair during the winter. In repairing, inspect all the field machinery; tighten all frame bolts, clean and wash the bearings with coal oil or gasoline; overhaul and straighten all bent members, replace unserviceable parts; sharpen all cutting edges and apply a coat of paint where required. Winter repairing insures against break-downs, loss and annoyance in rush seasons.

Storing Soybeans.

By this time no doubt, all soybeans have been threshed and some attention should be paid to the storage of this seed. If the beans have been threshed in good condition, that is with a reasonably low content of moisture, storage will not be difficult. On the other hand, a high moisture content adds to the danger of spoilage when stored. It has been recommended that storage in bags, which may be moved occasionally, will largely prevent the danger of heating which is prevalent in large piles and will facilitate the marketing of the beans in good condition.

Apple Crop Report.

The quality of the apple crop in Ontario is superior to that of last year. Some damage was sustained due to early frosts on October 24th and 25th. The last estimate of apple yield in September indicated a commercial crop of 1,069,000 barrels, which will be reduced by the cause just mentioned. The output in 1932 was 918,500 barrels. Exports have been exceptionally heavy and up to November 7th this season 238,000 barrels had been shipped from Ontario as compared with a total of 132 900 barrels up to November 25th last season. The high rates prevailing for sterling are proving a very favourable factor—the present rate of sterling is $5.25 as compared with $3 77 a year ago.

Wintering the Brood Sow.

The brood sow deserves her fair share of winter accommodation. A pen that is well bedded, dry and free from draughts is essential. Place the feed trough some distance away so that she is forced to exercise outdoors daily. Eradicate lice and round worms; there is no market for them. Feed a mixture of grains to maintain the sow in fair flesh, but use barley sparingly unless the sow is very thin. Provide clover or alfalfa hay to be eaten at will. Be kind to the sow, but not "too kind," or weak, unthrifty pigs will result.

Head of Apiary Department.

Dr. E. J. Dyce has been appointed head of the Apiculture Department as successor to the late Prof. F. Eric Millen, who headed the department for many years.

Dr. Dyce, who is a graduate of the Guelph College, took his doctor's degree at Cornell University, and has the distinction of being the principal discoverer of the new process for honey which has resulted in a great increase in the sale of the Ontario product in the British Isles and elsewhere.

As a result of his appointment, he automatically becomes Provincial Apiarist, with the duty of controlling disease in the apiaries of the Province.

Agricultural Society Class At Ottawa Winter Fair

First prize in the Class for 5 lots of grain and seed open to Agricultural Societies was awarded to Earlton Society, Temiskaming District. This was a well earned reward for enterprise in a pioneer district where a community seed cleaning plant was established by the Agricultural Society only this year. This Society also won the wheat championship on a very fine entry of Garnet.

The Agricultural Society Class is a new feature of the Winter Fair which aroused much interest as evidenced by 14 societies entering including exhibits from 70 farmers. As no member of a Society could contribute more than one lot of grain or seed many new exhibitors were encouraged to venture Prize winners were as follows: w

1. Earlton Agrircultural Society, $50.00.
2. Pankenham Agricultural Society $40.00.
3. Carp Agricultural Society, $30.
4. North Lanark (Almonte) Society $20.00.
5. Fitzroy (Kinburn) Society, $15.
6. Arnprior Society, $15.00.
7. Renfrew Society, $15.00.
8. Vankleek Hill Society, $15.00.
9. Carleton County (Richmond) $15.00.
10. South Lanark (Perth), $15.00.

Storing Vegetables for Winter.

Select well-grown, disease-free unblemished material and handle it carefully to avoid mechanical injuries. An earth floor basement under a dwelling house or a regular root celler may be used. Proper ventilation is very important and a temperature of 34 degrees Fahrenheit should be maintained. The beet, cabbage, carrot, celery, parsnip, potato and turnip require dark, slightly moist storage space, while onions do best under dry, cold, dark conditions.

New Grades For Eggs.

Important amendments, whereby further protection is afforded to both producers and consumers, have been made in the egg regulations by Order-in-Council. The new grades consist of A-1, A, B and C, in place of Specials, Extras, Firsts and Seconds. The words "New Laid" may be applied only to grade A-1, and the word "fresh," or any other equivalent of that word, to grades A-1 and A.

Grades A-1 and A are divided respectively into three classes, Large, Medium and Pullet, and all eggs possessing the quality of Grade A may be sold in that grade irrespective of size, but the eggs of different sizes must be packed separately, with the size indicated on the container. As grade A-1 is a super grade, the packing of eggs of this grade may be done only by producers authorized by the Dominion Department of Agriculture. Storage eggs are not permitted to be sold in a higher grade than B.

"B" grade consists of reasonably clean eggs .sound in shell, and eggs weighing less than the rate of 22 ounces to the dozen shall not be grad-in B. There are two classes, Large (24 ounces) and Medium (22 to 24 ounces).

"C" grade consists of all eggs below A and B grades, but which are fit for human consumption.

Official Crop Report.

The latest official crop bulletin shows that with the exception of sugar beets, the yield per acre of all field crops in Ontario this year is below last year. A severe period of drought and intense heat during July reduced the yield of spring grains and hay and clover crops. During August and September more favourable growing weather prevailed and the yield of late crops turned out much better than mid-summer prospects indicated. The volume of production of all field crops for 1933 is about 8 per cent below 1932. But farm prices show considerable improvement over last year and are 15.6 per cent higher. As a result the value of these crops is estimated to be $121,553,000, compared with $114,250,500 in 1932 or an increase of $7,403,000 in spite of the smaller output.

Fall ploughing got away to a good start, but was made difficult by dry weather and later by heavy snowfalls. Farmers planned to sow a much larger acreage to fall wheat, but owing to lack of soil moisture, many fields that were already prepared were not seeded. The sown acreage of fall wheat is estimated at 630,700 acres compared with 595,000 in 1932, an increase of 6 per cent The condition of fall wheat at the end of October was 96 per cent of the long-time average and fall rye 95 per cent.

The Instinct Changed—Never!

A Scotsman and an Englishman, two boyhood friends, met on a street in Edinburgh after many years.

The Englishman said, 'Mon, if it's nae auld Tommy! Lang may yer lum reek. Hoo are ye the noo?"

The Scotsman said, "Harold, old bean, I'm delighted. Let's toddle along."

They joined arms and sauntered up the street, passing old familiar places amongst which was the "Old Pig and Whistle," where in years gone by they had spent many convivial hours together.

They passed the "Pig and Whistle," turned right around and passed it again. Invitations were off as if by mutual understanding. At the third time of passing the doors of the famous hostel flew open.

The Scotsman said, "Harold, dear chap, do you remember? Do let's."

The Englishman said, "Och Aye," or words to that effect.

They entered, put their feet on the rail and looked around.

The Englishman said, "And where hae ye been tnis lang syne?"

The Scotsman said, "Oh, casting about, dear old egg; Java, China, British Columbia—fine country that—lots of shootin', just at one's back door, so to speak. Why, I was walking along in North Vancouver when I saw a cougar right in my path."

The Englishman said, "The heck you did."

The Scotsman said, "Beyond doubt. I levelled my gun and shot him between the ewers."

The Englishman said, "Ewers, wot's ewers?"

And the Scotsman said, "Mine's a beer."

The waitress who had taken the man's order some time ago now returned to his table deep in meditation.

"Ah," said the customer brightly, "a penny for your thoughts, young lady."

The girl raised a pair of worried eyes.

"Well, sir," she said, "we are very busy to-day, and I was just wondering whether you were a stewed rabbit or a boiled fowl!"

THE CHESTERVILLE RECORD

Friends

TOWARD THE END of that first afternoon in the secretarial class at the university Rose McBride no longer believed that the typewriter was a machine that might write unexpected things of its own volition; she felt free to rest the aching spot in her back for a minute and look around the room. nineteen typewriters clicked uncertainly under the determined efforts of the nineteen girls who were beginning the six months' course; nineteen faces, bent on the chart of the keyboard, paid no attention to Rose's eager blue eyes exploring the long room.

Only one other girl had her hair bobbed like hers. Rose was disappointed. The newspapers had said that all the college girls were having their hair bobbed, and she had coaxed her sister Nora to cut hers for her. She was glad it was done; it was so much easier to wash. Then too she had an uneasy fear that the smell of the stockyards clung to those who lived nearby, in their hair and on their clothes. She fluffed her curly black tresses about her thin triangular little face and sniffed the reassuring soapy odour. Then she looked at the back of the girl in front of her; there was not much to see of her except silky brown hair that lay close to her head like a cap and a cheek dashed with fine clear colour, but as the girl turned to get a fresh sheet of paper Rose's heart came up into her throat!

It was Miss Ewing! The very Miss Ewing who had taught the dancing class at the settlement for four whole meetings the year before! Rose's ambition to go to the university had come through her. Rose had watched her gracious ways for those four nights and for a year afterwards had planned continuously how to bridge with Nora's loyal help the distance between her own world in the stockyards and that of Miss Ewing in the university.

First they had found the secretarial course, which for all it was listed in the university catalogue was just like any other course in stenography, then the morning dishwashing job and the evening work in the candy kitchen, which left time between them for Rose to go down to the university and back.

Rose had never thought of such luck as finding herself in Miss Ewing's class. She watched her as long as she dared, and at the end of the hour glanced at her hopefully again, but Ernestine Ewing did not once look her way.

Rose pulled her tam-o'shanter down over her head, slipped into her old coat and pushed her hands into its sagging pockets. Jolting towards the stockyards in the trolley car, she studied shorthand curves with Miss Ewing's face between her and the notebook; all that evening as she worked in the candy kitchen, wrapping caramels and cutting fudge, she thought about the wonderful encounter with her heroine. When she climbed into bed at eleven o'clock she had half a notion to wake Nora and tell her.

"I guess I was hoping that I should see her," Rose admitted to Nora the next morning, "but I did'nt realize it."

"What did she say to you, Rose?" asked Nora with respectful interest. "She didn't see me."

"Didn't see you!" Nora bristled indignantly.

"Oh, well," Rose said soothingly, "we have to be keeping to our work. You wouldn't think how hard it is to remember whether 'r' or 't' comes nearer to your finger!"

Rose's fingers were stiff, and her morning dishwashing at the restaurant did not limber them noticeably. At every lull in her work she practiced thumping on the edges of the sink with her forefingers, reciting as much of the keyboard chart as those fingers were supposed to master.

She practiced shorthand pothooks valiantly all the way to class. It was a long ride, and she had enough time for the exercises. She knew already that shorthand was going to be easy for her. Fortunately, she had the kind of mind that enjoys codes and word signs.

She put her whole anxious attention on her work for the shorthand hour and made a creditable two pages to hand in to Miss Bradshaw, her instructor. When the typewriting period came she was tired and, to her dismay, sleepy.

For twenty minutes she laboured to make a perfect copy of the exercise set for her, but the letters blurred before her eyes, and her fingers struck the keys haltingly and made an astonishing number of mistakes. At last she resorted to desperate measures.

"Would you mind if I opened the window in front of you, Miss Ewing?" she asked timidly. "I'm that sleepy I need the cold air to wake me up."

The girl glanced up in surprise at the sound of her name. "Surely. My soul needs airing too," she answered with a whimsical smile.

"Did she speak to you to-day?" Nora asked Rose after she came home that night.

"Indeed she did," Rose replied. "O Nora, she's sweet!"

For days Rose planned so that she should always have some question to ask Ernestine about the lesson, but she realized before long that the girl had not remembered her.

"And I thought she really liked me!" Rose lamented to herself.

She kept her discovery from jealous Nora, and morning after morning as the sisters hastily dressed she went with the account of Ernestine's school dresses, her gay audacity with Miss Bradshaw and every word that she addressed to Rose herself.

"I'm so glad you're getting to know her, Rose!" said Nora.

After that, how could Rose tell her that Ernestine was only pleasantly indifferent? "You mind that you learn pretty ways like her," Nora said, "And don' you talk any more about using lip stick, like the girls in the shop!"

Rose made half-hearted friendly advances to the other girls of the class, but after Ernestine they seemed colourless; besides she was not sure that any of them wanted to know how Rose's confidence in herself was slipping. She worried mornings while she washed piles of dishes. It might be, she thought, that after she had finished the secretarial course no one would want a girl like her for a stenographer.

She was slow with her typewriting; in three weeks she had not completed the first page of exercises. Miss Bradshaw, brisk and businesslike, was nevertheless soft hearted; she took special pains to come round every day to stand behind Rose's chair and dictate to her. Rose tried to forget her fatigue and nervousness, but without success; she found herself stiffening in dread whenever Miss Bradshaw so much as looked her way.

The dictation halted one day when Miss Bradshaw looked down to see tears on Rose's brightly flushed cheek. The girl fished her crumpled cotton handkerchief from her sleeve and wiped her face furiously. "If—you would please go away!" she managed to say in desperation. "You make me that nervous! I can tell when you're looking at my back from the other end of the room! The shivers run all over me when I think you're coming."

She was horrified at the speech, but to her astonishment Miss Bradshaw only smiled. "You run along down the hall to the rest room, Miss McBride," she said. "Honesty is good for the soul, but sleep will be even better. Lie down till class is over and then come back."

Miss Bradshaw was sorting papers at her desk; Ernestine Ewing sat beside her and helped with deft, lazy fingers.

"You'd make a really first-class filing clerk, Miss Ewing," said Miss Bradshaw.

"You know, I make a first-class anything for the first week," said the girl, smiling. "I tell you that in confidence. It's the second week, when I begin to get bored, that all my qualifications take wings."

Miss Bradshaw glanced at her sharply. "Is that the trouble with your typing lately? I never saw a better beginning than you made. Your hands are just right for typing. You have practiced the piano, I imagine."

"Oh, I play," Ernestine replied cheerfully, "but practice—never!"

"Oh!" said Miss Bradshaw. She caught sight of Rose. "Do I make you shiver now, Miss McBride? I think you need more practice at your typing. Put your hand here beside Miss Ewing's. See the difference? Your fingers are short and stiff; hers are long and flexible. Of course she gets the technique quicker than you do."

Rose took her hand back hastily; it was red and chapped from dishwater.

"You could stay and practice here," Miss Bradshaw went on, quite unconscious of Rose's embarrassment, "but you'd be interrupted. Miss Ewing tells me she has a typewriter in her room that you may use for an hour after class every day, and she will teach you a little if you need it."

Rose's blue eyes widened; she clasped her hands ecstatically—and then she remembered. "I have to work," she said. "I'd love to, but I've got to be back at my job at four."

Miss Bradshaw tapped the desk with her pencil. "Could you arrange some other hours?"

"Well now, maybe I could," Rose said thoughtfully. "They wouldn't let me work later than ten at the candy shop, because they close then; but maybe they would let me in early in the morning. I'll ask this evening Thank you, Miss Ewing and Miss Bradshaw!"

She left the two looking at each other; Ernestine's face was tender with pity, and Miss Bradshaw's was grim. "I should say it was up to us to see her through, Miss Ewing. Thank heaven, she has a real gift for shorthand, and it isn't too late for her to come up in typing."

"I can do it," Rose said the next day. "It was all right at the shop. And, Miss Ewing, I finished the first exercise to-day. You won't have to teach me that!" She was radiant with happiness, and in the shelter of the desk her feet sketched a little dance step quite of their own accord.

"Where did you learn that?" Ernestine asked with interest. "I thought that step was my own invention!"

"You taught it to me," Rose said proudly.

"I did?"

"When you had the class at the settlement last year."

Ernestine laughed. "I beg your pardon for recognizing your toes before your face, Rose. I can see you now at the end of the row. But I was only there a night or two."

"Four," Rose corrected her. To be walking over to Ernestine's room with her, to be called Rose, were enough to take all her attention. To think what she could tell Nora!

"Was it so many?" Ernestine asked. "I know I stopped soon; I usually stop soon, but that was sooner than usual. The car ride made me sick, and the stockyards do smell!"

"I know," Rose said apologetically. "We went there to live first because Tom had to get work. It was easy to get jobs there and cheap rooms. Tom always said that when I was through high school we'd move away. But he died last year, and we had to stay for a while longer. But Nora's in high school and I'm studying stenography just as Tom planned."

"Here we are," Ernestine announced. "The typewriter's on the table. Try it to see how you like it while I make tea."

The hour was a succession of delights and embarrassments; Rose tried to drink tea as daintily as Ernestine, to strike the keys with Ernestine's easy freedom; and at the end of the hour she had completed another perfect exercise.

Miss Bradshaw smiled brisk approval at the two girls next day, and with the aid of another cup of tea Rose went bravely on to learn the use of her middle finger. It was a pity that she was still so sleepy. The manager of the candy kitchen told her that, if she couldn't stay awake over her work he would have to find another girl. The threat frightened Rose, but otherwise she had never been so happy and never had had so much to tell Nora in the Sunday mornings that were nearly all their waking time together now

With Ernestine's help even the stubborn fourth fingers were growing more dependable. Rose's work was slow. but it was not the nervous, haphazard fumbling for keys that it once had been. The most marvellous thing was her acquaintance with Ernestine's friends who dropped in through the afternoon hour of practice and chatted with Rose as easily as with Ernestine Then the supplementary lesson was pushed more and more into the background; Rose came over regularly after class, but other and more fascinating things occurred.

"What's the use?" Ernestine would say and yawn. "I'm lazy to-day. You must be dead yourself, Rosaleen. Why work so hard? You've caught up with me by now—ahead of me in shorthand."

"Caught up with you?"

"Indeed you have!"

"Why are you taking that course, Tina?" asked a visitor amiably. "We all thought you would have dropped it before this."

"How well you know me! It wasn't my idea; it was Uncle Dickey's. He's a darling. you know, and is usually a tractable lamb, but this winter he got the idea that I ought to be looking forward to supporting myself. Not that there was any real need, but he said father would have wanted it—" She was silent for a moment.

"Well, of course, he thought I would teach," she continued, "but I thought of stenography. Do you know why, Sarah?"

The visitor could not imagine.

"I earned a whole dollar once, typing some history notes for Uncle Dicky. So I told him I believed I should be a financial success at typewriting; indeed my experience had proved it! Uncle Dicky was slightly startled; typewriting is a little common for him, you know, but he could hardly protest, could he? So he agreed, but I have a feeling he'll repent about June and call me home. I don't think he's told mother yet. I haven't! I shall know enough typewriting to do an occasional letter for him—if he wants me to!"

"Don't work too hard," Sarah said and laughed. Rose made no comment.

"Come over here, Rosaleen," Ernestine coaxed her. "You're so tired. Sarah, trot along to your studies. We want to sleep!"

Rose lay down; she was confused and tired. When she awoke Ernestine was still asleep, and the hands of the little table clock were at five. Rose snatched her wraps and fled for the street car.

Her fears were justified; the manager of the candy kitchen was in high dudgeon. One more trial he would give her, and then he would find a girl who could put her mind on business!

Nora coughed that night and kept her awake, and Rose went over a good many things in her mind. She thought how she could get Nora into a warmer room next winter; she wondered how it would seem to play at working and studying, knowing all the time that she would be fed and clothed and housed whether she did well or badly; and she made the hard decision what she must do the next day.

She had left her notebooks in Ernestine's room in her hurry and so could not work at her shorthand on the car.

Miss Bradshaw's eyebrows went up at her explanation. "Very well," she said, "but don't let your shorthand drop. Your typing isn't speeding up as it should."

"I know it," Rose said bravely. "I'll be working at it more, Miss Bradshaw."

"Wasn't I the sleepy dormouse?" Ernestine hailed her. "Did you find your books on your desk. Rosaleen?"

"I did and thank you," said Rose. "I cannot come over to-day, Ernestine."

"Why not?"

Rose hesitated. "Because I cannot work over there," she replied, "and I must work. I'll stay here and practice."

"But, my dear child," Ernestine said impatiently, "you need something besides practice. You need a cup of tea and some fun!"

Rose shook her head.

"Oh, well—" Ernestine lifted her chin, and her lovely colour deepened. "I'm sorry. I thought you found it useful."

"Ernestine — Miss Ewing—" Rose ran after her. "I do thank you! I never could have learned anything without you. But now—Nora coughed hard all night," she finished pitifully.

"You are very welcome," the older girl said formally. "Good-bye."

Rose went miserably back to her typewriter and in that hour accomplished little. But when Nora coughed again through the night and could not go to school in the morning for the pain in her chest Rose forgot all about her own forlorness. She begged half an hour off and saw the woman for whom Nora sewed to make sure she did not lose her place. That afternoon she practiced well in spite of her fatigue, and in her great anxiety she scarcely noticed the pain that Ernestine's casual greeting gave her.

Nora was better before long, and Rose, though white and tired, had improved noticeably in her work; but Ernestine did not like the look on her face. It was too still and quiet, and Ernestine felt somehow responsible. She left a basket of fruit on Rose's desk for Nora with a pleasant inquiry after the little sister and was answered with a surprised smile that went to her heart. After that the two were friendly again, though Ernestine did not ask the girl from the stockyards to her room.

Rose carried the gift to the excited Nora; but she could not share Nora's rosy daydreams. That door was closed. She seldom caught a glimpse of Ernestine's friends, who had liked her and called her Rosaleen.

Since she had lost them, she centred her hopes on finding a well-paid place as stenographer. She meant to find a better room in a cleaner part of the town and to dress pretty Nora as she knew that she ought to be dressed. Perhaps Nora could have whatever friends she liked; Rose was a little shaky on that point. Friends seemed to come by accident; you picked them up, and pretty soon they dropped you, and there was nothing you could do about it.

Spring came at last, the campus blossomed in formal beds of tulips, and Rose noticed the ivy buds lying bright against the gray stone walls. "It's May, Miss Bradshaw," she said shyly. "Is that too early for jobs to be coming up?"

Miss Bradshaw pursed her lips. "It's a poor season, but don't get discouraged. I'm quite ready to recommend you when anything good appears."

Rose took up her practicing with little heart. What if she had gone through all the hard winter and nothing to come of it!

At the desk before her, Ernestine was folding a letter with beautiful preciseness; she put it into its envelope with apparent satisfaction. A much-handled letter lay beside her, and she took it up to read again.

My dearest Ernestine.—I find I shall need the services of a stenographer. The manuscript for my new book is ready to be typed, and I shall be writing many letters until it is all in print. It seems to me only fair to offer you the position.

I must say frankly that I had not looked forward with great confidence to making you the offer. I remembered your offer of last summer to catalogue my library. It resulted in three hundred volumes stacked on the floor and only fifty cards made out! After that you went off to a house party to recover from your labours, didn't you? But your instructor, Miss Bradshaw, gives me a very encouraging account of the way you have carried the secretarial course. I have always said that you would be successful at anything on which you would put your mind for six months.

Faithfully and affectionately yours,
Richard Brewer.

Ernestine had written her answer with all the care possible; she had even brought it to the classroom to copy, because she liked the size of the letters on the typewriter that she used in class. She did not intend that Uncle Dicky should lose any of his awakened pride in her. But her letter read:

Dear Uncle Dicky.—I am very grateful to you for your invitation to come home and let myself be spoiled this summer. I should love to do it. But—

What I need, and what I am going to get, is a real job here in the city. I am going to get a boss who won't let me off to go to a house party when I coax!

The stenographer you want is named Rose McBride. She is in this class, and she is competent and charming; you won't have to teach her how to work. You also want, dear uncle, her little sister, Nora, who needs the country air. I should think that she might be well employed for the summer in watering the canaries or takin- Laddie for walks. Rose is my friend. In fact she made me what I am to-day, a real stenographer.

Don't tempt me again. Please don't tell Rose I spoke of her; engage her through Miss Bradshaw. You will do this for me, won't you? I think father would have approved.

Your self-respecting niece,
Ernestine.

She swung round in her chair to watch Rose's flying, accurate fingers. The slanting sunlight showed plainly the worn places on the cuffs of the girl's winter dress, the blue hollows under her eyes and her firm, repressed little mouth.

Rose whisked out her finished paper from the machine; as she stood up she met Ernestine's old comradely smile. It warmed her as not all the sunshine could do; it seemed to assure her that friendships were enduring even between a stockyards girl and a university senior.

"If you're ready," said Ernestine, "I walk along with you and mail this letter."

COOKIES AND CAKES THAT MELT IN YOUR MOUTH.

THE BUSIER WE BECOME, the more keen we are these days to hit upon successful short cuts. In the cake world, there is nothing that will go so far in being broadly helpful as a good batch of cookies—whether they are all baked at one time or the dough wrapped in waxed paper and baked as required.

This week we have for our readers a very good recipe and several variations for them which should be a big help in households where heavy calls on time and larder are made at this time of year.

Basic Recipe.

This is a good basic recipe, plain but so nice—take:

2-3 cup shortening
2 cups brown sugar
2 eggs
4 cups flour
2½ teaspoons baking powder
¾ teaspoon salt
½ cup milk
1 teaspoon flavouring

(If desired to use sour milk or cream instead of sweet, use only 2 teaspoons baking powder and add ¼ teaspoon soda.)

Cream shortening and sugar very thoroughly. Beat and add eggs and milk. Mix and sift flour, baking powder and salt together. Add to mixture, add flavouring (extract or grated rind of orange or lemon, or spice, etc.). Form into a roll and chill thoroughly for several hours or over night. Slice thin, with a very sharp knife. Bake on greased pans, 8 to 10 minutes, in a hot oven—450 degrees Fahrenheit.

Spice Cookies.

Add 1 teaspoon cinnamon or cloves or nutmeg or mixed spices, to Simple Cookie recipe, decreasing the amount of flavouring if vanilla is used or omit extract. You may include 1 cup chopped nutmeats or currants, raisins or a mixture that includes finely shaved and cut candied peel.

Ginger Cookies.

Use only 1 cup sugar and add 1 cup molasses to Simple Cookie recipe; sift 2 teaspoons cinnamon, 1½ teaspoons ginger and ½ teaspoon soda with the flour (if you are using a recipe with the sour milk and soda in it, this ½ teaspoon soda is still to be added).

Caraway Cookies.

Add 1 teaspoon caraway seed to the Simple Cookie mixture.

Chocolate Cookies.

Add 2 squares chocolate, melted over hot water, or 2-3 cup cocoa (with less flour), to the Simple Cookie mixture.

Peanut Cookies.

Use peanut butter instead of ordinary shortening ,creaming it and the sugar together in the usual manner. You will not need quite so much liquid as the peanut butter is itself a trifle more liquid than butter or other shortening. You may press half peanuts into the top of the cookies or sprinkle them with chopped nuts.

Senior Hockey Re-Organized at Thursday Night's Meeting

A goodly number turned out last Thursday evening to a meeting in the Town Hall in an endeavour to effect an organization for the carrying-on of senior hockey in Chesterville, with the result that a new executive was formed with Alf Jarvis, captain of last year's team, as president; W. O. Dixon, coach; Howard Fulton, team manager; P. S. Boyd, secretary-treasurer; O. L. King and Preston Elliott district representatives. With good squads out at nightly practice, there seems to be all kinds of material for a good aggregation to carry on the winning ways of Chesterville's hockeyists.

"Father, what is a retaining fee?" asked the small boy.

"A retaining fee," replied his father, "is a sum of money paid to a lawyer before he would undertake to do any work for a client."

"Oh, I see," replied the boy, "like putting a shilling in the meter before you get any gas."

Toyes Hill

Mr. Freddie Harper left on Sunday for Uncle Sam's Domain.

Born—To Mr. and Mrs. Earle Johnston, a daughter. (Congratulations.)

Miss Lula Hunter, who was operated on in the Brockville General Hospital, is gaining nicely.

The young people intend to practice soon for their Christmas Tree.

The farmers are delighted over having a new factory at Toyes Hill. It will be 36' x 50', all under one roof and it will surely fill a long felt want as the milk had to be drawn four miles. It is being erected on the site of the former plant.

Mr. and Mrs. Dalton Coons and family spent Sunday with the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Smith.

Mrs. Jas. Casselman is gaining at time of writing.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Hoare have returned to their home at Centreview after spending some time with the latter's sister, Mrs. Jas. S. Casselman.

Mrs. David Gallagher has been on the sick list but is gaining at time of writing.
