Modern Equipment Modern Methods

Gone are the crude, harsh methods of conducting funerals used in the past. Modern methods and equipment have taken away much of the coldness. The funeral is conducted by us in such a way that the last memory is always a beautiful one. Those whom we serve are invariably impressed with with the calm, quiet dignity of the funerals—a fitting way to pay a last respect to a lovedone.

HENRY'S Shorthand School Ottawa, Ont.

No school in Eastern Ontario offers a better training, or ensures a more successful future. It leads all others, and ranks among employers as "THE SCHOOL OF HIGHER EFFICIENCY"—a fact borne out by 580 pupils who have, since January, 1913, left other Ottawa schools to come to HENRY'S.

It is not surprising then that business men, in advertising for stenographers, specially say, "Graduates of Henry's Shorthand School preferred."

Write for particulars about our course.

"My Irish Rose" At Finch

The play, "My Irish Rose," given in Massey Hall, Finch, on Saturday evening, St. Patrick's night, was an unqualified success. The hall was filled with a very appreciative audience who followed the story with the best of attention. The various parts were all well taken, each player seeming well suited to his or her part. The cast of characters was—Colum McCormick, a prosperous Irish farmer of County Kildare, Andy Gillies; Maurice Fitzgerald, a rich young Dublin artist, Douglas McQuitty; Terry Creigan, a young Irish patriot in exile, Will Foley; Mr. Archibald Pennywitt, a wealthy English tourist, Crawford Barkley; Mr. Michael Pepperdine, a barrister, Mr. Phillip Casselman; Thawn McGilly, the laziest man in County Kildare, Tom Mallett; Ann Mary McCormack, Colum's sister, Muriel Stewart; the Widow Hannigan, with money in the bank and an eye on Colum, Mrs. Will Johnston; Eilleen Fitzgerald, a Dublin heiress, Elma Kennedy; Lady Agnes Barricklow, who hesitates at nothing, Lillie Brownlee; Peggy Burke, a servant on the McCormack farm, Ada Winters; Rose Creigan, a wild Irish rose, Mrs. Crawford Shields.

During the evening a very pleasing piano duet was given by Mrs. John Casselman and Miss Margaret Casselman. Miss Margaret Casselman also acted as accompanist throughout the play.

Mrs. J. W. Carr sang sweetly a number of Irish songs, accompanied by Miss Jennie Cameron with the guitar.

A guitar duet was played by Ferguson Stewart and Miss Cameron and was favorably received.

Four young High school girls, Norma McLeod, Eileen McLean, Edna Nephew and Audrey McIntosh danced an Irish Jig very prettily. These girls were trained by Miss Davidson of the High School staff, their music being played by Miss Pacey also of the staff.

A drawing was held to decide the ownership of an Irish Chain quilt, the holder of the lucky ticket being Mr. H. Coughlar.

The women of the Institute wish to thank all who assisted, the players, and those who decorated the stage and helped in any way to make the evening a splendid success.

Death of Little Wanda Lane

On Thursday, March 15th, there passed away little Wanda, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Lane of Cedar Grove, a bright and cheerful little darling of six years and five months. For over two weeks her condition was of a serious nature but a few days previous to the end seemed to brighten when it was thought she might recover, but it was only to know her loved ones again, and at 12.15 on Thursday night she passed away. She leaves to mourn, her heart-broken daddy and mother and little sister Keitha, and a number of sorrowful little cousins who will miss the chatter of little Wanda during their family re-unions hereafter. The funeral, which was largely attended was held at the house on Saturday at 2 o'clock, when the Rev. Mr. Dustin of the United church, Aultsville, had charge of the service, while the choirs of Gallingertown and Aultsville assisted with the singing.

Mrs. Clifford Gove and Mrs. Orval Beckstead sang very sweetly "God's Way is the Best Way." The little white casket was almost hidden from view with beautiful floral offerings from the following: a wreath, Mr. Wm. Rounds and daughter Viola, Ogdensburg; a beautiful pillow with "Wanda" from Mrs. Captain Denner of Redwood, N. Y.; a wreath from Mr. and Mrs. Ona Lane and family, spray from Cousin Madge Wells, wreath, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Froats; wreath, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Werely; spray, cousin Mercedes Froats; wreath, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Dafoe and little daughter, and a pillow from Miss Gladys Armstrong and her school. The remains were taken to Riverside Lutheran cemetery and laid to rest beside her Grandma Rounds who passed away a short time ago.

It is natural to think of the little bud that never came to flower, but let us seek our comfort in the words:

"Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not,
For of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Interment was made at Maple Ridge cemetery.

MANY HOCKEY GAMES

Last Friday night in an exhibition games with the fast Carp team Chesterville landed on the long end of a 6 to 2 score. The visitors have a nice working bunch of players but were handed an unnecessarily rough ride by the locals which left a decidedly bad feeling in the minds of their home town supporters.

Monday evening Eric Casselman's Youngsters lined up against Billy Dixon's Kids and came out on top with a 3 to 1 score.

Tuesday evening a team representing Maple Ridge and a town team battled to a tie in sixty minutes of continuous hockey the score being one goal each.

Last night the Juniors hooked up with Kemptville Juniors on very soft ice, the score being 8 to 1 for Chesterville.

ROVER SCOUTS

About a dozen of the older boys of First Chesterville Troop of Scouts met with Scoutmaster Boyd in the Public School on Tuesday evening to discuss the re-organization of the Troop, in order to meet the conditions brought about by the difference in the ages of the Troop's members. To provide for this condition the S.M. explained the Rover program, which is a considerably enlarged and extended system of Scouting especially suited to young men of 16 and over, as contrasted with that for boys. It was unanimously agreed to form two Rover Patrols which will continue to be attached to the Troop under Mr. Boyd as Rover Master. Jack Morris and Doug McGee were elected as Rover Mates of the new Patrols. More details about the Rovers will be given at an early date. Meanwhile applications for the Scouts are pouring in, so that there will be at least two Scout Patrols and two Rover Patrols in the Troop.

"Finnigan's Fortune"

On Saturday evening, March 17th, in the Music Hall, there was staged "Finnigan's Fortune," an Irish comedy, by St. Mary's Dramatic Club. "Finnigan's Fortune" was by no means inferior to those plays presented by the above club on the festival of St. Patrick in years past. The talent displayed by the various characters was a manifestation of their efficiency and control of the situation. "Finnigan's Fortune" is an Irish play up to the times of the present day habits and fashion. Instead of wild, impossible characters, it contains real flesh-and-blood people, who do things as an audience believe they would do under similar circumstances. Such was the case in the various members of the cast. So real and natural was the presentation that in the illusion of reality the large audience forgot that it was acting, and gave vent to their appreciation of the display with much laughter and applause. The roles played by Mr. Walter Carr and Mrs. Pat Flynn, as Larry and Mrs. Finnigan, were up to their usual high standard and were much applauded throughout. The other characters, which were Patrick, son of Mr. and Mrs. Finnigan, by Mr. Matt Flynn, Rafferty, by Mr. Eric McMillan, Dutch Jake by Mr. Leo Kearns, Count de Mourney, by Mr. Ted Carr, Katy, "Jake's daughter," by Miss Pearl Murphy and Lady Lovejoy by Miss Madolyn McAvoy, were all of a superior order. Each in turn received loud applause. They made an excellent support to Mr. and Mrs. Finnigan and showed a wonderful opportunity for strong individual work. Between the acts Messrs Pat Flyyn, Tommy Carpenter of Montreal, and Miss Florence Millea, sang in their usual appreciative style and were much enjoyed by all present. Mr. Flynn's rare tenor voice is always a treat to a Chesterville audience, as is also Mr. Carpenter's comedy talent and Miss Millea's sweet soprano. The accompanist, Miss Ella McCloskey, as usual furnished excellent music for the occasion. Her great control of the pianoforte in the production of the different Irish airs with variations were listened to with rapt attention and pleasure. The C.W.L. and executive are very commendable for carrying out the arrangements in such harmony and success.

Young Woman Passes Away At Elma

On Saturday morning, March 17th, this community was deeply grieved to hear of the death of Ada Barkley, the beloved wife of Mr. Reginald Barkley. Mrs. Barkley was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lennox Baker of Cannamore and had been identified with this community nearly five years., having taught school for 4 years at No. 8 in the township of Williamsburg. In August, 1927, she was married to Mr. Reginald and with her husband was preparing to move into their new home which has been built since their marriage, when she was taken ill. She has taken a deep interest in the Church at Elma, being on active member of the Young People's Society, a teacher in the Sunday School, member of the Ladies' Aid and W. M. S. She was of a kindly disposition, unassuming but resolute in purpose, loved by those who knew her. The sympathy of the community goes out to her husband and her parents, brothers and sister in this hour of sorrow. The funeral service was held on Monday in the United church, Elma, which was conducted by Rev. John Hurst, who preached from Job xvii: 11, "My Purposes Are Broken Off." Rev. A. Nimmo of Morewood, assisted in the service. Mrs. Orren Casselman and Miss Nancy MacIntosh sang a duet, "My Father Knows."

Flowers were sent as follows:

SHAMROCK TEA

The March meeting of the Women's Institute of the Morewood branch took the form of a very attractively arranged Shamrock Tea, held at the home of Mrs. (Rev.) Stafford. The rooms were nicely decorated with shamrocks, while ferns and potted plants gave a spring-like appearance. Green and white streamers reached from the chandalier to the four corners of the charmingly set table. A tempting menu was served by the hostess in good St. Patrick style.

The President, Mrs. H. Myers, presided. All listened attentively to a paper read by Miss Eva Reveller on Irish wit, a piano solo by Miss Greta Faulkner, a song by Mrs. Stafford, also a charming Irish song by a poular soloist, Mrs. Harold Faulkner. A contest was conducted by Mrs. A. B. Allison, Mrs. A. Carlyle capturing the prize. A hearty vote of thanks was proposed to the hostess by the President and seconded by Mrs. V. Fetterly. All joined in singing the National Anthem.

Two Sides To Evevy Question

"There are two sides to every question. This is just as true in advertising as in an argument. In advertising there is the side of the advertiser and the side of the public.

"From the viewpoint of the advertiser in the newspaper, advertising is a means of increasing his volume of business. Commercial development has made advertising as necessary to retail business as customers. Without customers the advertiser could not remain in business, so he advertises to attract customers.

"The other side of the question is that of the public. To the public newspaper advertising means the bringing of the store show cases to the office and living room. It is a service extended to the public by the advertiser, because it aids the customer in ascertaining where that which is wanted can be purchased at the most advantageous price. Newspaper advertising has abolished shopsearching. To save time for the shopper lengthens her day.

"So although there are two sides to newspaper advertising, there is no disagreement between the two. Finding that advertising serves the public as well as business, the merchant has two reasons instead of one for advertising, and the customer learns that the most progressive merchants are the most extensive advertisers, so there is a double attraction. By the nature of business, if advertising didn't help the buying public it could not help the advertiser."

Ask Me Another.

He: I can answer any question.

She: Well, what's the broad band used to keep the saddle in place on a horse's back?

He Aw, that's a cinch.

School attendance officers often have difficulty in keeping children in school, but M. M. Grey of Mecklenburg county, North Carolina, is having unusual troubles in connection with his duty. About 30 children under his jurisdiction are being kept out of school by their parents who believe the world is coming to an end in a few weeks, and make the children attend church services every day instead of going to school.

THE LATE ELIZABETH HELEN SCOTT, WINCHESTER

The sudden and unexpected death of Miss Elizabeth Helen Scott on Thursday morning, Marcn 8, came as a great shock to her many friends. Miss Scott, who for the past few years lived with her niece, Miss Nellie Tweed, had been about her household duties as usual during the day, and had just returned in the evening from a call to a neighbor's. She then went to the front to sweep some snow off the verandah, where she was seized with a stroke. Her neighbor, with whom she had chatted a few minutes before, was passing on her way down town when she noticed Miss Scott on her knees on the varandan. She hurried to her, and Miss Scott was just able to tell her that her legs were becoming numb and she was unable to help herself. Mrs. Hutt got what what assistance she could and Miss Scott was taken into the house, but was not able to speak. She lingered in an unconscious state until Thursday morning when she passed peacefully away. Miss Scott was born and lived all her life in the community. Gentle, and kindly in spirit, unselfish and considerate in disposition, always thinking of the welfare of others, and never sparing herself in any way, her life was one of useful benevolence and Christian deeds. Her religious convictions were strong and her christian charity was unbounded. Her life was one of unselfish service and religious devotion, and to those who knew her best she will be most missed. She was a member of the United Church, and her pastor paid a just tribute to her christian character at the service held in the church on Saturday afternoon, March 10th. She was in her 68 year.

The funeral was very largely attended and floral tributes were received from a wide circle of friends which Miss Scott had made during her residence in Winchester.

To mourn the loss of a sister are three brothers, W. L. Scott and T. A. Scott, Winchester; J. E. Scott, Smiths Falls; and three sisters, Mrs. R. A. Cheley and Mrs. E. T. Jenkins, Colorado Springs, Col.; Mrs. T. S. Toase, Toronto.

Following are the Floral Tributes sent: Wreath—Mr. T. A. Scott and Mrs. Faye Scott, Spray—Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Scott and Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Cunningham, Sheaf of Wheat—Mrs. R. A. Cheley, Mrs. T. A. Utman, Mrs. J. L. Dixon.

Those who attended the funeral from a distance were Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Scott, Smiths Falls; Mrs. Walter Flora and Sherwood Wilson, Ottawa; Mr. David Mooney, Vankleek Hill; Mr. and Mrs. F. Darling, and Mrs. Ward Smith, Chesterville; and Mrs. A. Dillabough, Morewood.

The pall-bearers were Messrs. J. H. Ross, H. B. Fetterly, E. Merkley, J. D. Stewart, G. C. Reveler, F. M. Eagleson. Interment was made at Maple Ridge vault.

Writing Up A Wedding

Most newspaper men shrink from and prefer to pass that responsible task of writing up a swell wedding to a female society editor. Yet there are exceptions. Occasionally an editor is found who can paint word pictures of nuptial events that any lady reporter might envy.

We just discovered one like that, who appears to be hiding his great talents in an obscure Kansas town, while he ought to be holding down a big city job. Here is a sample of his literary ability, which proves our point:

"It was a wonderful wedding. The girl was as sweet as any girl who ever lived,but modern. As she walked up the aisle on her father's arm, her lips lightly tilted at the corners with a happy smile, she was a picture of modest beauty. Her filmy wedding gown and gossamer veil floated around her fair blonde head like a halo. She was as nearly an angel as girls get to be in this world. At the altar, as she passed from her father, the man she had always loved, to the other man to whom she would devote the rest of her life, her dainty slipper touched a potted lily resting on the floor and turned it over. Smiling again, she turned to the dear old pastor waiting at the chancel, and said: 'That was a hell of a place to put a lily.' "

Or a Strong Man Either.

"Yes, my son."

"What is a flapper?"

"A flapper, my son, is a woman who does what an old maid would like to do and has not got the constitution to stand it."

Latest New York Murder A Horrifying Mystery

New York is again shocked—or maybe only thrilled—by a murder mystery which appeared on the verge of solution a few days ago, but which may never be solved. It presents some unique features, one of them having suggested the name by which it is known—the "torch murder." The victim was Miss Margaret Brown, a highly respected, middle-aged governess. The man who is being sought by the police is known as Dr. Louis Clement, once indicted for fraud. The threads that seem to connect Clement with the murder are the slenderest; and, should he be charged with the crime, it would be a matter of the greatest difficulty to convict him in the absence of a confession or some other evidence which may be in the possession of the police and which has not yet been made known. In fact, the police assert that they have no evidence against anyone. Still they would dearly love the chance of an interview with Dr. Clement, especially if they were permitted to employ the methods that have before now cleared up many a doubtful case. Men have been sent to the chair on clues even more insignificant than those now in the hands of the New York and New Jersey police.

Blazing With Gasoline.

The murder was discovered by a chauffeur named Murdock, who was driving his employers, Mr. and Mrs. Eno Campbell, home on a road not far from Morristown, N.J., on the night of February 20. Near a shack by the roadside they noticed what they supposed to be a burning log. Murdock and Campbell jumped out of the car to investigate, and as they came closer they saw that the blazing log was really the blazing body of a woman. Frantically they gathered snow and heaped it on her. The woman lay still, and apparently conscious. Her eyes were open, and though the lower part of her body seemed to be in a blaze the wind kept the flames away from her face. Finally the flames died out and only a few sparks remained. The horrified rescuers did what was not unnatural. Leaving the woman they rushed for the motor car and drove as fast as it would carry them to the nearest policeman a mile and a half away. They met him just as hew as getting into his car. He had been summoned, he explained, by news of a fire along the road. Together they went back, and there agony was renewed when they found that the wind had again fanned the flaming gasoline about the woman's body, and about the lower part it was again blazing.

The Mystery Deepens.

Again they poured snow on the figure, and gently lifted the still breathing victim into the car, bearing her with all speed to a hospital. There it was found that her legs and the lower part of her body had been frightfully charred, though the face, apart from the lips was unmarred. The woman lingered until four o'clock in the morning, and then after an effort to say something, her spirit passed. There was nothing upon the body to prove her identity, but a description of the clothing published in the newspapers led to an indentification later in the day. The clearing up of this part of the mystery only deepened other aspects of it. The Gillespies, by whom she had been employed as governess, told the police that on the Monday morning of that night when she was discovered blazing at the side of the road, she had suddenly announced that she had received a message from a sister who was ill in Los Angeles. She must leave at once. They were astonished and strove to dissuade her, but Miss Brown would not be argued with.

Bonds and Money Returned.

She told the Gillespies that she was about to withdraw some bonds from the bank and Mr. Gillespie advised her to be careful. Indeed he insisted, and so instead of withdrawing $6,000 in bonds which she had on deposit with a broker, she took only $2,000. She then drew $500 out of a savings account, and received a last $70 in salary from her employers. Then she disappeared. Later in the day she visited a niece and gave her $20 for a relative who was in the hospital. She told her niece that she was going to Florida with the Gillespies and would be busy all that day and the next. The niece was to call on her the following day. Then she disappeared and so far as is known, nobody who knew her, except the murderer, saw her until she was picked up on the road. The next day the police received a letter which contained the two thousand dollar bonds and the $500 bill, enclosed in a letter in which the writer said that he had committed the murder after he and Miss Brown had driven out in his car and taken a couple of drinks. He had made advances toward her which were repulsed. Then he struck her on the head, poured gasoline over her, set it on fire and drove away .

Looking for Fake Doctor.

The police are inclined to think that the letter was a blind, though undoubtedly written by the murderer. It declared that he was about to do away with himself and made several references which migh be extremely useful to the assassin when caught, if he sought to prove that he was not the author of the letter. Tracing back the career of Miss Brown it seemed that she had never had a man friend until a few months ago when she fell on the street and was assisted by an affable stranger . She never mentioned the name of this man to anybody, but once a man waved to her from a motor car and she said to another governess who was with her that this was her admirer. The glimpse the governess had of this man, the fact that Dr. Clement, a faker who got in the newspapers some years ago by pretending to make gasoline out of water, had been heard to mention he had a woman friend named Brown, and that Miss Brown had spoken of Dr. Clement are the links connecting this man with the case. It is known that Clement had a fondness for women and an even greater fondess for money, without regard as to how it came into his possession. But all that is known of this case seems pitifully inadequate compared with all that remains unknown .

Judge Maschner of Detroit does not approve extreme formality between a husband and wife. He granted a woman a divorce on the ground that her husband never spoke to her, but wrote her notes addressed: "To whom it may concern."

Even breaking and entering may have extenuating circumstances. L. R. Stutz of New York, was caught in the act of breaking into a tailor shop and arrested. He escaped prosecution, however, when he explained that the shop had closed without returning his suit in which he was to be married that night.

Although John A. Balfour did not literally keep a promise made to a little girl of Albany, N. Y., 30 years ago, he did not forget her. Leaving for South Africa in 1898, he promised Alida Taylor "a nice doll." He became a diamond mine owner and upon his death recently left his former little friend, who is now Mrs. Rooney, a legacy of $850,000.

Former Morewood Girl Slain By Husband

(Mail & Empire)

Friday last brooding over some fancied wrong Harry O'Connell, aged 33, a printer employed by the Copp Clark Company, Carlaw Avenue, shot and killed his wife, Eva (before her marriage Eva Fetterly of Morewood) aged 27, dead, wounded a relative, Edward McCarthy, aged 55, of 43 Melrose avenue, Ottawa, in the left hip, and attempted to slay his two-year-old daughter, Helena, with a revolver. The tragedy was at his home at 1745 Dundas street west. Mrs. O'Connell was shot through the left side of the neck, and died almost instantly. McCarthy received a bullet in the hip, and this in its outward passage penetrated the pocket of his coat and grazed the knee of his son Victor, aged 24, a boarder in the O'Connell home.

O'Connell was taken into custody by Detective Sergts. Silverthorne and Alexander and Detective Watson, of Cowan Avenue station, on a charge of murder. Chief Coroner Crawford, who went to the house and investigated the affair, ordered the removal of the body to the Morgue, where an inquest was held.

McCarthy was conveyed to the General hospital, but after his wound had been dressed, to the home, where he gave his testimony regarding the tragedy to the police.

Man of Quiet Habits.

O'Connell is a short, slimly built man, of quiet habits and very reticent. He and his wife hailed from the Ottawa Valley. He had the position of janitor in the building where he lived.

The slaying occurred about seven o'clock at night. The whole family consisting of Mrs. O'Connell, her four children, Earl, aged six, Harry Hugh aged four, Helena, two, and James, four months; Edward McCarthy, his wife Delia; and Victor, his son, and Miss Hazel O'Connell, O'Connell's sister, were seated at the table having dinner when O'Connell entered.

O'Connell, however, instead of coming into the room and joining the others at the meal, murmured some kind of greeting, then turned on his heel and left.

McCarthy says he saw him scowl at the crowd, as if he resented their presence; then he too got up abruptly from the table, and without saying a word to the others, followed O'Connell downstairs.

To reach the ground floor premises, O'Connell was obliged to go outside to the street, and enter by the front door. McCarthy met him as he was re-entering.

"Do you want to come in?" he asked O'Connell. The latter grunted a surly "Yess" and passed the other up the stairs to the second floor, where the family resided. McCarthy followed him up.

Had Revolver in His Hand.

As they reached the landing just outside the door of the dining-room, McCarthy was horrified to see O'Connell standing there with a revolver in his hand.

"My God!" he cried, as O'Connell's terrible purpose flashed upon him. He made a run toward the holder of the gun.

O'Connell, however, was too quick for him. Stepping over the threshold of the room, he lifted the revolver and pointed it at his wife.

Mrs. O'Connell rose to her feet with a scream. A chase around the room followed. O'Connell eluded the arms of the other adult occupants of the apartment to halt him.

At last O'Connell cornered his wife at the window which looks out on Lansdowne avenue. Terrified, Mrs. O'Connell wildly sought a way of escape. But all way of escape was blocked.

As a last resource, she flung her arm back against the lower pane of the window, smashing the glass. She was about to fling herself out backwards, when O'Connell fired. The deadly missile struck the unfortunate woman in the side of the neck, causing her to collapse beneath the window. The bullet passed through the base of her brain, and out through the window.

Almost before the echo of the first shot died away, O'Connell lifted the revolver a second time and fired a bullet at McCarthy the elder. The missile struck McCarthy in the hip, causing a flesh wound, and after going through Victor McCarthy's trousers, dropped on the floor.

The third shot fired was at two-year-old Helena as she sat in her high chair at the table. Luckily the bullet missed the child and buried itself in the wall a few inches behind her head.

Grappled With O'Connell.

Despite his wound, McCarthy, Sr., grappled with the frenzied man. Miss O'Connell and Victor had gone to see if they could do anything for Mrs. O'Connell. But she was unconscious and past all aid.

McCarthy's wound so incapacitated him that he was forced to give up the fight. Victor followed O'Connell into the hall, and there dispossessed him of the revolver. There O'Connell and McCarthy, Jr., stayed until the arrival of Detective Watson and P. C.'s Watt and Clarkson of Cowan avenue station. The wounded McCarthy was removed to the General hospital in an ambulance, and after receiving treatment, was able to return to the house.

Two citizens first on the scene were M. Rossier, 46 Glenlake avenue, and John Wedgewood, 284 Keele street.

"On looking up toward the side window of the building," said Rossier, "I saw a woman's arm outlined against the light-colored window-blind. The next moment I heard the sound of crashing glass. I saw a woman's arm emerge through the hole. Then I heard the sound of a revolver shot, and saw the woman collapse against the lighted room.

Suspected a Tragedy.

"Guessing that something terrible had happened, I ran across the street and into the premises. On reaching the top of the stairs at the second landing, I came upon a man, whom I learned later was Victor McCarthy, kneeling down beside a man who sitting on the floor in one corner of the hall. On going into the dining-room I saw a woman lying on the floor. She was bleeding from a wound in the neck. There was wild confusion everywhere."

Wedgewood's story was in its essentials similar to that told by Rossier. He was a close second to Rossier as the latter raced up the stairs to the scene of the tragedy.

As the inmates of the death chamber ran out to the hall, McCarthy handed the revolver to his mother, who, in turn, passed it to Miss O'Connel. Miss McConnell handed it to P. C. Sandford, of Cowan avenue station, who was off duty at the time and had been drawn to the scene by the sound of the shots and the crowd which gathered. He it was who notified the police.

Another near-witness of the affair was Earl Silk, 1295 College street. Silk was standing on the corner of the street, waiting for a street car, when he heard Mrs. O'Connell scream, the crashing of the glass and the subsequent sound of the revolver discharging its deadly missiles. He was a good third to Rossier and Wedgewood.

Police Find Revolver.

When the police searched' OConnell, they found an automatic in his coat pocket. He told them that he had taken the weapons from the premises below. The automatic was loaded, and it is evident that he intended to use it to complete the slaying of the whole family and their friends. He said to McCarthy, when the latter saw him with the gun; and asked him what he was going to do:

"I'm going to kill you all."

When interviewed by the detectives in the cells of the Cowan avenue station later, McConnell made a statement. In answer to the officers' queries as to whether it was he who killed Mrs. O'Connell, he replied:

"If she's dead, I shot her."

O'Connell was in his shirt-sleeves when taken from the house and conveyed to the police station. He seemed quite self-possessed when first questioned at the house, but on his arrival at the station he was crying and wailing.

"She was a good wife," he cried to the officers. "I'd nothing against her —nothing at all!"

He would not give any reason for the killing, however.

Weekly Review Of The Legislature

Acting on the instructions of Hon. John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture, representatives of the department are to be sent to the United States to make a study of "cereal treat," or an 8 per cent. cream, that has been placed on the market in certain cities of the Province. Recently the sale of the product has been engaging the attention of the Committee on Agriculture. Milk producers of the Province complain that it is a manufactured product and not the product of the farm. Present legislation holds that 16 per cent. butter fat is the lowest cream that can be placed on the market. Opinions expressed before the committee have led the department to make a thorough investigation into the product.

Following up the splendid program of social legislation that has been introduced by the government, Premier Ferguson has brought down in the Legislature a Bill to protect widows and orphans from the action of the father and husband in failing to provide for them adequately under their wills. Introduced under the title, "The Widows and Orphans Maintenance Act of 1928" Premier Ferguson's measure will give the right to the Judge of the Surrogate Court to alter the last will and testament of husbands who leave their families unsufficiently provided for. Power is given the Surrogate Court Judge to make provision for the family but such provision is not to succeed the amount that would normally be received by the wife if the husband had died intestate.

Introducing his measure, the Premier stated that the principle of the bill was not unheard of as far as the Ontario Legislature was concerned. "It was pretty well recognized," he stated, "that modern methods of business have changed in such a way as to change the character of a man's estate. Formerly an estate consisted largely of real estate and under the law a widow was protected by dower. To-day the bulk of the estate is in securities. In the case of persons who die intestate the widow is protected, but the husband may make a will which deprives her of her rights."

The Bill, the Premier explained, provides that the widow may make application before the Surrogate Court Judge, who would take all the evidence and determine whether or or not the widow was entitled to a greater amount of the estate than had been left to her under the will. The Premier stated that the government fully realized the importance of interfering with a man's will, but he expressed the opinion that it was better to have the estate maintain the family rather than have them fall back as charges on the municipality.

J. G. Lethbridge, Progressive Leader, congratulated the government on introducing the legislation and promised his group would give the government its strong support in placing the Bill on the Statute Books of the Province.

Attacks have been made on the distribution of Hydro by Members of the Opposition Groups of the Legislature were more than met and adequately disposed of by Hon. J. R. Cooke during the course of his contribution to the Budget Debate in the House. He deprecated in no uncertain tones the "critical and unreasonable" attitude shown by some of the opposition members of the Hydro enterprise. The government, he stated, was moving as rapidly as was humanly possible toward supplying power to the rural districts of the Province. As an instance of this, he pointed out that the sum of $6,000 per day had been expended on rural installations and extensions during the past year and drew the hearty applause of the House when he declared that $8,000 per day would be the amount to be expended in the same direction this year.

The government, stated Mr. Cooke, had no apologies to make for the purchase of power from the Gatineau development. It was, he contended, the best contract that could be secured on the North American continent. He pointed out very strongly that within 20 years, despite the three great sources of power at Niagara, Ottawa and the St. Lawrence, that the power resources of the Province would be overtaxed if the loadings increased at the present yearly rate.

Hon. Geo. S. Henry, Minister of Highways, has introduced in the Legislature amendments to the Highways Traffic Act, which will prohibit the use of the spotlight on motor cars when the law becomes operative. For the safety of persons using the public highways at night, an amendment has also been introduced compelling operators of vehicles over 80 inches in width to carry red and green lights on the front and rear of the truck. The legislation also contains provision making it necessary for all cars to have two distinct sets of brakes, one of which may be locked when the car is parked. Change has also been made in the Bill which allows a police officer to force a driver of a truck to drive two miles to a scale if the truck is thought to be overloaded. Formerly the officer could only direct the driver to a scale within one mile of the scene of the offence.

Of particular interest to rural localities is the announcement of Hon. Geo. S. Henry, Minister of Highways, made during the course of his contribution to the Budget Debate, that the government is preared to provide additional relief to the townships and counties from taxation for provincial and other highways. Relief will be in proportion to the increase in traffic that is not of a local nature. In making the announcement, Mr. Henry at the same time made it clear that the Province was not prepared to assume full financial responsibility for the provincial highways.

Mr. Henry pointed out that for the Province to assume the entire burden of all provincial highways that it would mean, in fairness to all, the taking over of the entire road system of the Province. This would mean that the highways would have to be supported by direct taxation and that suggestion did not meet with the approval of the government.

Can A Rooster Count?

Experiments in psycholgy are being carried on enthusiastically with many kinds of animal life as subjects. A recent test reported from the University of Chicago is quite interesting.

Kernels of corn were placed in a row on the floor, with every third kernel tacked down, and a rooster was permitted to help himself. Failing to lift a fastened kernel, he would pass on and eat the next. The missing kernels were replaced and next time he made no attempt to devour the stationery kernels. Then the third kernels were loosened, but he still passed them by until his foot struck one and moved it; then he went back and ate them all.

Some who witnessed the experiment believe that it proved the rooster's ability to count; others were skeptical. Possibly he was an unusual bird, or had been influenced by his university environment.

We don't vouch for the story, but if you doubt it try the experiment on your own rooster.

Ask Your Banker

There must be as many gullible people in the world as ever, judging from the high-powered stock selling literature which still passes through the mails. Oil and mining stocks of the wild-cat variety appear to have held their own in popular favor, although one would think the public had been sufficiently warned against them by this time.

While it may be too sweeping to say that all such stocks sold by mail are swindling devices, it is perfectly safe to class the vast majority of them as such. It may be that somewhere, sometime, a person has bought such stocks on the strength of promotion literature and has realized a profit on his investment. But if such be the case we have never heard of it.

Sometimes an "investor" may receive small "dividends" for a time, but these are usually merely bait to encourage additional investments, which are eventually lost. This does not apply of course, to securities marketed by reputable financial concerns, but refers to the "blue sky" kind which are readily recognized by prudent business men.

When tempted to invest in unknown stocks of any kind, it is a wise precaution to first consult your banker. His advice will always be on the side of safety and may be the means of avoiding serious loss.

Better Farm Homes

Among the states in which the degree of Master Farmer was conferred last year, Oklahoma made a good showing with 18 outstanding farmers so honored. Naturally they were selected from those who not only had made farming profitable, but had also given attention to means for improving conditions of farm life.

It was found that without exception these 18 men had given thought to their homes, as well as to the efficiency of their farming operations. In each case the farm home was equipped with a lighting system, running water, sanitary facilities and labor-saving equipment to lighten the burdens of the house-wife.

The extension of electricity to the farm is going forward rapidly in many states, and is enabling women of rural communities to enjoy most of the conveniences formerly confined to town and city. Any scheme for the betterment of country life is incomplete which does not seek to reduce the drudgery of the farm women and add to the comfort and attractiveness of the farm home.

FLAMING STUBBLE

The field of spring wheat rippled and billowed like a sea of liquid gold between Eugene Kirke's binder and the motionless forms of the three hired shockers. The day was hot; the breeze, which had sprung up since noon, was parching. Yet the extreme warmth of Eugene's youthful blood was not entirely the result of the weather. As he gazed across the rolling grain at the men whom he had hired that morning he tugged impatiently at the brim of his straw hat. His jaw tightened. Eugene was in charge of the harvesting for the day, for an unexpected meeting of the Associated Wheat Growers had drawn his father and mother to the county seat. And ever since dinner the three laborers, Blackie, Joe Riconovich and Ed Preston, men of the sort commonly known as "drifters," had loafed. Eugene was now on his second trip round the hundred acre field. In that time the shockers had not stirred from their comfortable lounging places in the lee of some newly made shocks.

Eugene's pulse throbbed more quickly as the clattering binder neared the end of the round. It was evident from the insolence of the shockers that they regarded him as an easy boss. They plainly did not intend to do an honest day's work. The boy had never been noted for his calm; he was hot-tempered and impulsive. He lashed out the whip, intent on reaching the spot opposite the idlers as quickly as possible; the whip caught in the outside of the horse's harness, but he did not stop to unfasten it. He waited until he had drawn up opposite the shockers; then he jumped down and, unfastening the whip, charged toward theme.

"It's time you fellows were getting to work!" he said, breathing heavily.

The man called Blackie sucked on a straw, drew his feet under him and looked up. His flabbie face was almost hidden by black whiskers, and his clothes were hitched in the slouchy manner characteristic of idlers.

He seemed to be the spokesman for the trio, for the radical, Joe Riconovich, and the malcontent, Ed Preston, both turned to him.

"We ain't workin'," drawled Blackie maliciously. "Not until you come acrost with a raise. We're not slavin' for nobody without gettin' our price. We want a dollar raise."

"Raise!" shouted the youth, and his copper-hued cheeks turned scarlet, and his dark eyes flushed. "You haven't earned what you're getting!"

Blackie sneered openly. "You should worry what your old man pays. What d'you care? This wheat's got to be shocked. He'll shell out if he get's it done. Your ol' man's nothin' but a tightwad anyway!"

Eugene took a quick step forward. "Take that back!" he demanded fiercely.

Blackie paid no attention to the menacing whip. "Lookit papa's boy, will yuh?" he said, winking at his companions.

"You're fired!" cried Eugene. "You're fired, all of you! Get off the field before I use this whip on you! Get!"

The swarthy-faced foreigner got to his feet quickly. Ed Preston sat erect.

"Sit still!" commanded Blackie thunderously and turned to Eugene. "You hit me with that whip, sonnie," he said, "and you'll never hit another! Now think on that for a second."

But Eugene was past thinking. Anger consumed him. He drew the long whip aloft and cut the leader across the chest. Blackie scrambled to his feet, but before ne could grasp the stinging lash another landed on his shins. With a howl of pain he danced away. Eugene followed and brought the whip into play again and again, wrapping it around the thinly clad bodies of the retreating laborers. In a minute the men were running toward an adjoining strip of winter rye stubble, spurred on by the singing lash at their heels. Eugene drove them to the edge of the wheat field and left them muttering threats and shaking fists at his back.

"You'll pay for this!" shouted Blackie as the youth mounted the binder, but Eugene did not hear for the sickle had already resumed its noisy clatter.

Eugene did not look back at the discharged shockers. He did not intend to give them satisfaction of a backward glance. The loafers! They had got what they deserved. He had been astonished that his father had hired them, even though harvest laborers were scarce. Well, at least they would know better than to loaf on a Kirke field in the future!

Eugene had turned the corner on the far side of the field before he noticed that the wind had risen. It fanned his tanned cheeks and tugged at the loose folds of his shirt. Almost unconsciously he glanced to windward, and his body stiffened. Away to the west a thin column of smoke was visible. It was rising from the twenty-acre field of winter rye stubble, now cleared of shocks because a scarcity of hog feed had necessitated an early threshing. Behind the smoke he caught sight of moving forms. The shockers! They had set the fire!

A second column of smoke arose as he watched and then a third. The shockers were firing the entire length of the twenty-acre field. They were getting their revenge. The columns of smoke were drifting eastward toward the uncut grain. The wind was lashing the fires; They would race over the entire field of spring wheat as soon as they gained headway.

Eugene felt sick and helpless with fright. His first impulse was to seek help. He must have help! And the only person whom he could reach quickly was his sister Millie. He threw the binder out of gear and, locking his legs round the seat support, seized the long whip and lashed the horses. The next second the binder was bumping over the field toward the distant farmyard.

At the house Millie, kicking upon the screen door to empty a dish pan of water, heard the unusual clatter. She paused and levelled her dark eyes upon the galloping horses. Letting the dish pan fall clattering on the steps, the girl ran to meet her brother. "What's wrong?" she demanded.

Eugene half fell from his perch. "Fire! The wheat!" he gasped. "Mil, the wheat's a goner!"

Millie's gaze swept across the expanse of grain toward the west. So concerned had she been at her brother's clamorous arrival that she had not noticed the curls of smoke rising in the distance. Her eyes took in the situation at a glance.

"I fired the shockers, Mil! They loafed. They thought I was easy and demanded more pay. Even called father a tightwad! I couldn't stand it. I fired 'em! I drove 'em off, and they set fire to the rye stubble!"

Checking his tumultuous outburst, Eugene went on more calmly to tell what had happened in the big field. "We've got to do something, Mil," he finished. "We can't let it burn. Get some sacks. Pump the milk cans full of water. I'll hitch a team to the wagon. Mil, don't stand around mooning that way!"

Eugene rushed to the binder and started to unhook the tugs, but his hands shook and fumbled at the task. He could not keep his eyes from the smoking rye stubble.

Millie looked too. The fires had now spread almost the entire length of the twenty-acre patch—too great a stretch to be extinguished with wet sacks. Before they could get sufficient help from the scattered farms of the neighborhood the flames would reach the standing grain. There was now only a narrow strip of stubble between it and the fires, no barrier at all to the licking tongue of red. Millie's practical mind at once perceived the folly of her brother's plan for fighting the fire.

"It's useless to fight that way," she said.

Still holding the tug in his hand, Eugene straightened up and turned to his sister, wondering whether she really understood what the fire meant. "But the wheat will be wiped out in an hour!" he exclaimed. "It's powder dry. Mil, we've got to. I shouldn't have fired those men, Mil. I'm to blame! Hang it all, I didn't know what to do! Their loafing got on my nerves."

Eugene's shoulders sagged as he condemned himself. He gazed imploringly at the girl in front of him as if to ask a way out of the miserable mess in which his action had placed him.

Millie seized his arm. "You're not to blame," she said decisively. "You fired those men and they got what they deserved! Now leave those horses alone and climb into the old car. You can't fight the fire with sacks, just two sacks. Drive off those men. Keep them from setting new fires. That's the first thing. You do that. Hurry! Leave the rest to me."

Eugene obeyed the firm, sharply spoken command with alacrity and evident relief. He bounded eagerly away. Meanwhile Millie, turning on her heels, went racing toward the low shed that served as a shop. Darting into the bulding, she came out presently pulling behind her a dusty tarpaulin. As fast as she could drag her heavy burden she sped toward the pump and the oblong water tank. With a heave of her slim shoulders she tossed the tarpaulin over the edge of the tank and then shoved it into the water. Stooping, she picked up a rock that lay beside the tank and dropped it upon the submerged canvas. It sank slowly; the water crept over the dusty folds.

Millie wasted no time in watching the tarpaulin sink. She ran to the silent binder and, unhitching and unharnessing the outside horse, leaped astride it. Urging the frightened beast at its greatest speed with vicious thuds of her heels, Millie went charging out of the yard. She trusted that the tie rope would serve her as a rein to guide her mount across to the low farmhouse of the Billses. She knew that Martin Bills was at home, for that freckled dependable boy had just driven by in the family car. She needed him.

Although Eugene did not know what his sister intended to do, he wasted no time. He cranked the car, backed it into the yard and set out for the field. On passing the house he remembered the new light rifle that was hanging behind the pantry door and stopped to get it; The weapon might come in handy in case the three incendiaries refused to move on.

With the rifle beside him Eugene sent the car toward the thickening curtain of smoke. It took most of his attenion to steer the machine round the new shocks of wheat and the bundles not yet shocked, but whenever he could steal a glance ahead his fear awoke again. He could not see the crackling line of fire. It had not indeed advanced so swiftly as the heavy smoke had led him to think. Most of the stubble had been green when cut, and, as the wind had not yet whipped away all its natural moisture, there had been more smoke than fire. But, the respite would be short. The hot wind, now hotter because it passed over the flames, struck Eugene's face. He could hear the crackle of the burning straw. As far down the side of the rye field as he could see the flames were leaping. How could those ravenous tongues of red be checked? How did Millie intend to fight them? Eugene felt his heart miss a beat. It was impossible that those crackling flames could be smothered; the wind was too strong. In another ten minutes the wheat would catch. And those shockers had done it!

Through the waves of heat and smoke that the wind drove toward him Eugene glimpsed a man bending over with a lighted fagot of twisted straw. Holding it low, he ingited a stretch of stubble, and a new column of smoke arose. Eugene's pulse quickened. The blood thumped at his temples. He gave the car more gas, and when it rammed a shock and stalled because he had been too much interested in the form ahead of him to watch his course he scrambled over the side and went racing toward the incendiary. Forgotten was the rifle; forgotten was the car in the pathway of the flames. As he stumbled along over the rough ground, his one thought was to lay hands on the man who had set that last stretch afire. The smoke set him coughing.

Warned by the sound, Joe Riconovich looked up just as the boy emerged from the haze. He did not put much faith in the wall of fire that separated them; dropping the half-burned fagot, he ran. Eugene plunged along, seeking a break in the flames through which he might cross. He ran with all his might but the foreigner was fresh and steadily lengthened the distance between them. Eugene found no break in the line of licking flames. The heat became intense. Persperation poured from his cheeks. The wind blew round him, choked him and made his eyes smart. Half-blinded by the hot fumes, he tripped and crashed to the ground.

He lay for a second unable to move. He heard Joe Riconovich shout a warning to his confederates. He heard Blackie break into a deep, throaty laugh and then the thud of scurrying footsteps. Eugene realized that the laborers were fleeing. Their work was accomplished. In fifteen minutes their revenge would be complete; they could watch the burning wheat from afar and laugh in security. With a fresh pang of fear he glanced at the narrow lane of stubble between the spring wheat and the flames. It seemed scarcely more than fifty feet wide. The fire was drawing close. Remembering the car in the pathway of the flames, he struggled to his feet. If he could do nothing else, he could at least save the car!

As he turned and staggered toward it he caught sight of another car—the Billses—bobbing toward him. Martin Bills, who was piloting it, drew up at the extreme end of the fired stubble and waved frantically for him to join him. Eugene wasted no time in starting his own car. As he drove forward he noticed that Millie was with Martin and that she was struggling valiantly with something that completely filled the back of the automobile.

"It's no use!" he cried as he flung himself out. "The field's gone, Mil. There's only a rod or two of stubble left. I drove the men off but the field's doomed."

Millie did not look up. Her hands were busy with the water-soaked tarpaulin. With deft fingers she knotted a lariat about one corner of the wet canvas. Martin Bills looped a second lariat about the adjoining corner.

"It's too late to do anything," repeated Eugene, trying to make himself heard above the noise of the two motors.

Millie dodged past her brother and secured the other end of her lariat to the housing of the Kirke car, looping it securely about the drive shaft tube so that it could not slip to either side. Martin plunged under the Billses' car and did the same thing with his lariat.

"It's not too late," said Millie, glancing at the weaving line of fire. "Let me into the car. You ride the tarpaulin, Eugene; you've got to! It won't hug the ground without some extra weight. And anything we tie on won't stay at the rate we're going to drive. There's nothing to tie on anyway, and we haven't time. Climb on! And stick as you never stuck before! It's your weight that counts."

Before Eugene realized what was taking place the two cars jerked into motion. Martin was at the wheel of the Billses' car; Millie bent her slim shoulders over the steering wheel of their own. The wet tarpaulin, answering the combined tug of the two cars, straightened and lay like a sheet on the stubble.

Eugene saw what Millie meant. The cars, moving side by side, stretched the tarpaulin taught between the lariat ropes a little above the ground.

"Climb on!" cried Millie in a voice that carried above the uproar.

Then Eugene came out of his trance and flung himself on the thick, water-soaked tarpaulin. He sank his finger nails into the wet tarpaulin and clung. Under his weight the tarpaulin hugged the ground. It bumped over occasional small stones, but he did not loosen his grip. Straight for the line of fire the cars charged. Millie took the black, smoldering side, and Martin Bills the unburnt stubble. Then Eugene, realizing Millies' plan, saw that she had a chance to win. He clenched his teeth doggedly as the tarpaulin slid over the first tongues of fire.

The two cars raced along on either side parallel with the fringe of fire. Eugene's fingers loosened, slipped and sought new holds. The tarpaulin vibrated, bounced and surged under him. The wet folds collected fine dust and made the drag heavier on the two cars. Once Eugene tried to look ahead into the flames, but the smoke and heat almost suffocated him; he was obliged to bury his face in the wet canvas. The tarpaulin grew warm above the burning stubble. Eugene's legs grew hot. They thrashed against the ground and got many a bruise. The canvas so tightened under his hands that he found it hard to hold on. His finger nails broke; his finger tips bled; his clothes began to steam. Still he clung on grimly. Millie depended on him; the field of wheat depended on him. He must not weaken.

The cars roared on. Like an endless chain of red links the fire sped under the canvas. The tarpaulin was drying fast. It failed to pick up the fine dust now and was whipping the burning stubble with more freedom. Eugene's body tingled and then grew numb. The constant lashing combined with the heat sent waves of dizziness over him. He could not tell how far they had gone; re could not summon energy enough to lift his head to gaze at the narrowing lane between fire and wheat. He needed all his will power to cling to the canvas; he must not loosen his hold. He locked his hands tighter. Millie had said, "Stick as you never stuck before!" He would!

The cars were going faster now. The tarpaulin started to smudge. A tiny tongue of fire ate through it and, spreading, curled about the boy's leg. The odor of burning cloth mingled with the odor of burning stubble; yet Eugene's clenched fingers remained locked.

Millie was the first to glance backward when the cars roared to a halt at the end of the field. She caught a glimpse of smoldering stubble—patches that were numerous, but scattered and not alive with leaping flames. The fires could be beaten out. She jumped down and ran to the motionless square of tarpaulin and tried to lift the inert body that lay on it. The hands held. Martin came to her aid, but his efforts also proved futile. Finally he cut the folds of canvas with a knife, and then they carried Eugene to one side with his fingers still locked in the cloth.

A few minutes later Eugene opened his eyes and looked down at two crumpled handfuls of canvas. He turned questioningly to Millie.

"You stuck," she said to him. "Just look!" And Millie's brown hand pointed out the thin streamers of smoke, all that was left of Blackie's attempt at vengeance.

A BAKING AID

A wire basket, such as is used in an office for letters, is a useful article in the kitchen. When you bake potatoes, put them in the wire basket and shove the basket into the oven. This saves heat as it requires less time to put the potatoes in, and it may save burned hands, particularly when you take the potatoes out. Pieces of squash may be baked in the wire basket; and if you have cups of custard, they are much more easily put in the oven by means of the basket and are less likely to be upset if standing in the basket. The basket is a convenient receptacle in which to put dough nuts to drain when they are removed from the hot grease. If you wish to re-crisp crackers or warm buns up for a meal, the basket is better than a pan for holding them, as it permits the heat to penetrate quickly to all sides.

Is this true of your town?

Just as there are farmers who make very good money by intensively cultivating a few acres, so there are merchants in small towns who do a surprisingly large business.

Of course, they too cultivate their territory intensively. They don't wait for their customers to come to them—they go to their customers with frequent offers of what they know will tempt them. And they seem to sell everybody.

So regularly do they keep in touch with their customers that their offers of merchandise are eagerly awaited, and are read as if they were news—which they are.

These merchants use Long Distance frequently, to order goods for prompt shipment or to fill in sizes—and they find it good business to call important customers by Long Distance to advise them of opportunities.

There passed away on Tuesday, March 13th, at his home near Dunbar, a highly respected citizen in the person of Mr. Arthur N. Barkley in his 69th year after an illness of about a week, his death coming quite unexpectedly. Mr. Barkley was unmarried, his brother and the latter's wife residing with him in the old Barkley homestead where he was born. He was a son of the late Geo. H. Barkley, at one time a prominent shipper of live stock to the American market. In his last hours he received every attention and care from his sister-in-law, Mrs. Nathan Barkley and his sister, Mrs. Ellen Armstrong, who were at his bedside when he passed away.

The late Mr. Barkley took a keen interest in municipal affairs and sat at the council board of Williamsburg township as councillor and as deputy-reeve.

The funeral took place on Friday 16th in the Lutheran church at Dunbar where the Rev. Mr. Cronmiller conducted the service which was largely attended. The pall-bearers were Harvey Durant, Orrie Bouck, Bismark Barkley and Charles Marcellus, the remains being placed in the vault at Williamsburg. The floral tributes were received: "Gates Ajar" from the Barkley family and a spray from the Armstrong family.

Those left to mourn are one brother, Nathan; one sister, Mrs. Ellen Armstrong. Among those who attended the funeral from a distance were, Geo. Barkley, nephew, of Ottawa; Obadiah Miller, nephew, of Hammond; Mrs. Alice Kinsella and Mrs. Jessie Empey, nieces, of Hammond; Mrs. Ida May Armstrong, niece, of Vars; Henry Barkley, cousin, of Mountain; Mrs. Lena Simser, matron of the House of Refuge, Cornwall, niece, and Geo. Presbyterian Ladies' Aid

The Ladies' Aid of the Presbyterian church were invited to hold their March meeting at the home of Mrs. Barrie, a devoted worker of the society, on Wednesday, March 14th, at half past two. The President, Mrs. Shaver, was in the chair and proceeded with the afternoon's program.

The meeting opened by singing "What a Friend We Have In Jesus." Then followed Bible Study taken from John, 5th chapter. Mrs. Shaver then led in prayer. The Secretary was asked for the minutes of the February meeting, which was held at the home of Miss Elliott, which were read and adopted. After this different items of business were discussed, the most important, our Society co-operating with the managing board as to holding our Anniversary services. As March was previously appointed as our apron shower meeting, thirteen aprons were donated and word was received that more were to follow in a few days. After a little discussion it was decided to make the April meeting a towel shower. This motion was put before the meeting and carried unanimously.

Other items of minor importance were discussed when the President asked the Secretary for the roll call when sixteen members responded.

We were glad to welcome Mrs. Miles Marcellus back to our meetings after her illness. Mrs. Craig presided at the piano. Our worthy president asked us to meet with her for our April meeting.

The meeting closed as usual with the Doxology after which Mrs. Barrie and Miss Catharine Barrie served a dainty lunch. Mrs. Garrow moved a vote of thanks which was seconded by the president, Mrs. Shaver, and voted unanimous by the ladies.
